Reapportionment in extra innings

Idaho Legislature 1992

BOISE — On what was supposed to be the Legislature's last day to pass a redistricting plan, House conferees were reportedly close Friday to devising a plan with significant bipartisan support.

As a result, the House pushed back its self-imposed deadline from Friday to Tuesday.

Representatives have been negotiating feverishly for the past few days, trying to come up with a bipartisan compromise plan. The holdup, as it has been for months, was how to divide predominantly Democratic Bannock County.

But after meeting in caucus for 40 minutes Friday morning, House Democrats and Republicans agreed that they had made enough progress to ignore the deadline.

"We're exceeding the deadline," acknowledged Majority Caucus Chairman Con Mahoney, R-Idaho Falls. "But we feel like we're that close that it would be worth taking a weekend."

As a result, the House postponed consideration of the redistricting bill passed by the Senate Thursday. That plan, drawn up by Sen. Russ Newcomb, R-Twin Falls, passed on a party-line vote, with the 21-21 tie broken by Lt. Gov. C.L. "Butch" Otter.

Such a clear partisan division would almost certainly invite a veto by Gov. Cecil Andrus, a Democrat.

The House will again consider redistricting when it reconvenes Monday morning.

There had been speculation early Friday that the House would vote to suspend its normal rules, which would have sent Newcomb's plan to a committee and delayed its consideration by several days. Suspension would have allowed the House to approve the plan immediately and send it to Andrus before the deadline expired.

A two-thirds vote is required to suspend the rules, and the Republicans hold a 56-28 advantage in the House — exactly two-thirds. But at least one Republican, Rep. Black of Twin Falls, told his caucus that he would not vote to suspend the rules.

"There would have been no point," Black said. "We'd pass Newcomb's plan, the governor would have vetoed it, and we'd have accomplished nothing."

In addition, Black said, Magic Valley Republicans and Democrats had already agreed on a bipartisan compromise for the

Lots of security but no bombs at jam-packed CSI

By Karen Irwin
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Security officers were out in force, but the show went on without incident Friday night at the College of Southern Idaho.

Two days after a bomb squad destroyed a fake explosive device on the CSI campus, capacity crowds turned out for both the CSI-Utah Valley basketball games at the CSI gym and for a performance of the Brigham Young University Living Legends Dance Show in the nearby CSI Fine Arts Building.

Police, with the help of a bomb-sniffing dog from Mountain Home Air Force Base, combed both facilities Friday afternoon before CSI authorities let spectators inside.

The two buildings were locked until just before the CSI-Utah Valley women's basketball game began at 5:15 p.m. and the Living Legends show started at 7:30, CSI president Gerald Meyerhoeffer said.

Police searched all bags and packages going into the gym and opened only the three doors in the front of the facility for people to enter and exit, he said. Normally, six doors in the CSI gym are used during basketball games.

A note attached to the fake bomb found Wednesday in a restroom of the nearby Shields Building mentioned something about a game this weekend, but nothing specific, Capt. Bob Hodge of Twin Falls police department said.

He said the focal point for security this weekend would be the gym, but that all public buildings on campus would be watched.

Still, game-watchers seemed unaffected by the scare.

"The person is probably just somebody who is unhappy he didn't get a grant," Sherrill Chapman of Salt Lake City said.

Ann Brown, a parent of a CSI player, said she wasn't worried because if the threat were serious, the note would not have been left that far in advance.

Another spectator said he was hesitant at first about going to the game.

"But I've been eased after talking to a few people," Curt Bracken of Orem, Utah, said.

Paul Du Fresne, the Twin Falls director of public safety, said the same precautions would be taken before tonight's women's and men's basketball games against Salt Lake Community College.

"I hope this person realizes that this is accomplishing nothing and turns himself in," Du Fresne said.

Meyerhoeffer said the incident has made it hard for students and faculty to concentrate this week.

"The one time we checked there was a decrease in class attendance," he said.

Interlude in Red Tape delays demand for Bach taxes

The Associated Press

SAN JOSE, Calif. — The ads for "intimate" concerts brought the vice cops to Bill and Pamela Resch's home, but the only thing she was tickling were the ivories.

The city shut her down anyway and is seeking back taxes.

"That is crazy," the classical concert pianist said Friday. "If the city went after everybody who was teaching and playing piano in their home we'd have a lot of little old ladies out there who are criminals."

But it's hard to fight City Hall, especially if you turn your home into an occasional Concert Hall with a 1906 Steinway grand piano in the parlor. And if you runs ads touting $25 "intimate, romantic experiences with music."

"No one's interested in giving them a hard time, but what they were doing wasn't allowed," Assistant City Manager Regina Williams said. "Unfortunately, we're stuck in the role of playing the Big Bad City."

Indeed, the city has been attacked as a musical killjoy by local columnists, editorial writers and conservative National Review writer William F. Buckley, who has attended one of the Resches' musical evenings.

"If San Jose can't figure out a way to permit an artist to play the piano at night for paying guests, maybe the good old USA just doesn't have it any longer, to make jobs-jobs-jobs-jobs, and let us all be free and affluent, and proud," Buckley wrote.

The city struck its first sour note in the case six months ago.

In July, after vice officers went undercover at one of the couple's 12 to 14 annual "salon concerts," Resch was arrested and fingerprinted in his white tie and tails in front of his wife and several paying guests.

"I don't know why they didn't arrest Pamela, too," scoffed the couple's attorney, Michael Hurley. "I guess they thought Bill was the brains behind the scheme, or maybe they thought they had a conspiracy going."

Thus began what might be called Interlude in Red Tape.

San Jose officials said the Resches were operating an illegal business by charging people $25 each for a two-hour concert in their antique-filled English cottage. The neighborhood isn't zoned for commercial enterprises.

Then, the city said the couple owed back taxes, plus interest and penalties to the tune of $1,125 for the three years they held the concerts, which attracted 20 to 30 guests each time, but no complaints.

'Law of jungle' yields to new world builders

By Barry Schweid
The Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS — It was an extraordinary snapshot of the "new world order" as envisioned by President Bush.

American, Russian, Chinese and other world leaders side by side, working together.

The world remains beset by poverty, injustice and armed conflict, yet, as French President Francois Mitterrand told other world leaders assembled at the United Nations, "the law of the jungle" has come to an end.

They set about building the new world on the foundation of the refurbished United Nations.

"For the first time, it is clear that the United Nations is indispensable to us all," said Venezuelan President Carlos Andres Perez, typifying the unanimous sentiment at an unprecedented meeting of the heads of the 15 nations on the U.N. Security Council.

Long more a utopian vision, the United Nations only infrequently in its 46-year history has realized the hopes of mankind.

World leaders pledge nuclear cuts, stronger U.N. role in peace

The Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS — Leaders of the Security Council nations, at an unprecedented gathering that reflected a dramatically changed world, on Friday sought a more vigorous role for U.N. peacekeepers and lent fresh support to cuts in nuclear weaponry.

In a final symbolic burial of the Soviet Union, Russian President Boris Yeltsin claimed the now-defunct superpower's Security Council seat.

Thirty-one years ago, the late Soviet leader Nikita Khrushchev banged his shoe on the table in anger. "We've seen nothing like that today," said John Major, the British prime minister and current president of the Council. Discord has been replaced by cooperation.

With the end of the Cold War, and a mutual commitment by the United States and Russia to cut their nuclear arsenals roughly in half, the Security Council is beginning a fresh effort to keep the peace through an application of what is being called "preventive diplomacy."

That means stopping crises from turning into wars by supplying troops to a Security Council force for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security.

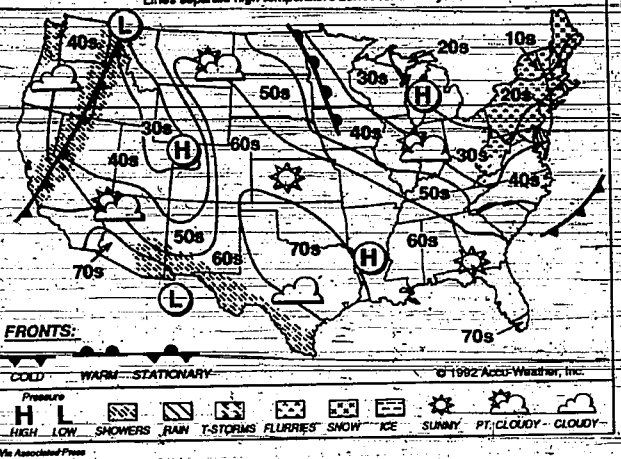

Today the threat of global nuclear war is more distant than ever before in the nuclear era, Bush said in addressing the primary reason for an optimistic fresh start.

Weather summary

Generally mild weather prevailed over Idaho Friday under mostly clear skies, although there were a few showers in the eastern sections of the state.

Clouds began spreading over Idaho Friday afternoon from a weather system moving inland from the Pacific coast, with showers expected to reach the central mountains today.

The mercury climbed into the 60s across southern Idaho although readings were in the high 50s even in the northern Camas Prairie area on Friday. Twin Falls and Boise set records for the date with high readings of 60 and 61 degrees respectively. The state's warmest reading was 65 at Hagerman.

Malad was the only station reporting any measurable moisture, and only a trace was recorded there.

Overnight lows were generally in the 20s and 30s, although readings in the single digits were recorded at mid-slope points and the higher elevations. Bear Lake had the coldest morning low at 2 below zero.

Elsewhere in the nation Friday, the highest temperature was 86 degrees at Miramar, Calif. The lowest was 13 degrees below zero at Alamosa, Colo.

Wet storm wallops Pacific coast with wind, rain, fog

The Associated Press

A wet, windy storm spread rain and fog across the Northwest on Friday and snow was scattered over the Midwest.

At midday, showers extended along the coast of Washington, Oregon and northern California. Crescent City, Calif., on the coast near the Oregon state line, received .82 inch of rain in the six hours up to 10 a.m. PST.

Fog in San Francisco cut visibility to less than two miles and delayed incoming flights at San Francisco International Airport by 1½ hours. The Federal Aviation Administration told airports throughout the nation to delay flights to San Francisco until new landing times could be arranged, said airport spokesman David Wilson.

About 33 planes an hour were allowed to land, compared to twice that many in good weather and 105 an hour during peak times.

The storm also brought strong southerly wind, with gusts along the coast of Oregon including 74 mph at Seaside, 81 mph at Tillamook and 97 mph at Oceanside.

Elsewhere, snow was scattered over parts of the lower Great Lakes and the upper Ohio Valley.

A storm developing over southern Canada threatened to produce strong wind and heavy snow in eastern New England. Winter storm watches were in effect through Saturday for eastern Maine and eastern Massachusetts.

In the Pacific, a moist frontal system brought an end to a 10-day dry spell over Hawaii's island of Hawaii. Heavier rainfall for the six hours up to 6 a.m. HST included 2.29 inches at Honakau.

Condoms gain OK

ROCKVILLE, Md. (AP) — Marketing of female condoms should be allowed in the United States if the maker provides further information supporting its claims of effectiveness, a federal advisory panel said Friday.

The panel's recommendation to the Food and Drug Administration is not binding, but the agency usually follows such advice. Friday's vote was unanimous.

The FDA staff and the 14 experts on the panel indicated they were troubled by some aspects of the company's application. Specifically, they said the company's data did not support claims that the condom prevents the spread of sexually transmitted diseases and did not provide enough statistical basis for calculating effectiveness in preventing pregnancy.

Quayle likes Cuomo

Knight-Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON — Will it be Bill Clinton or Bob Kerrey or Tom Harkin facing President Bush in the general election?

None of the above, says Vice President Dan Quayle.

"I've thought long and hard about who's going to emerge on their side," Quayle said Friday. "I've come to the conclusion that it's probably going to be Cuomo. Cuomo. My friend Mario Cuomo, the governor of New York."

As in the past, Quayle pronounced it "Mary-O."

eight-county region, and it would not have been right to abandon that compromise in favor of a bill with no bipartisan support.

The Magic Valley compromise was agreed on Thursday morning, said Rep. Bruce Newcomb, R-Twin Falls.

It would:

• Split the city of Twin Falls down the middle, with half becoming part of an eastern Twin Falls County district and half joining a western Twin Falls County district.

• Join three Gooding County precincts to the west Twin Falls County district.

• Attach three Elmore County precincts to a district made up of Blaine, Camas and Lincoln counties and most of Gooding County.

• Combine Cassia County, the southern portion of Minidoka County and the Murtaugh precinct of Twin Falls County into a district.

• Combine Jerome County and the rest of Minidoka County into a fifth district.

The only Magic Valley legislator who voted against the compromise, Black said, was Rep. Ralph Peters, R-Jerome. Peters could not be reached for comment Friday.

The last hangup, most legislators agreed, is how to split Bannock County. Pocatello Democrats, led by Sen. Patricia McDermott and Rep. Pete Black, want to draw the lines so that the city of Pocatello controls three districts. Bannock Republicans, led by Rep. Evan Frasure of Pocatello, insist that the city's population of 46,080 entitles it to only two districts.

If the House passes a bill with strong bipartisan support, said Rep. Pam Ahrens, R-Boise, there would be heavy pressure to pass it in the Senate, where Democrats have been divided on how to attack the problem of redistricting.

"You try to come out of your caucus with a united front, but they can't even agree on where the front is," Ahrens said. "They can't agree on what to do, and they've been whipsawing the rest of us as a result."

But Senate President Pro Tem Mike Crapo, R-Idaho Falls, said as far as he was concerned, the deadline had come and gone. The Senate would reopen the issue only if a House plan were signed, sealed and delivered, Crapo said.

"If we have agreement in both houses and in both caucuses on a bill the governor will sign, then we'll bring it up again," he said.

In the event that no plan passes both the House and the Senate, the Senate will take up a redistricting commission bill sponsored by Sens. Ron Beitelspacher, D-Grangeville, and Tim Tucker, D-Porthill.

The five members of that commission would be appointed by the Republican and Democratic leaders in both houses. The commission would be charged with recommending a plan to the full Legislature by Feb. 21. The Legislature, in turn, would have to accept the plan unchanged or reject it within five days.

The bill had been scheduled for a vote Monday, but Beitelspacher said he has agreed to delay consideration at least until Tuesday.

Looming over the entire redistricting process is the threat – or, to hear some say, the promise – of judicial intervention. A lawsuit, filed by a Republican Party worker, seeking to have a court draw a plan is pending before 4th District Judge Richard Newhouse.

Newhouse has scheduled a hearing Thursday on the case, at which Democrats are expected to ask him to throw out the suit as not being ripe for adjudication – that is, give the Legislature more time to come up with a plan on its own.

the most powerful U.N. body, has convened at the highest level. Most participating countries were represented by heads of state or government.

Sitting together at the huge circular table in the council's chamber, under a vast mural depicting the phoenix of peace rising from the ashes of World War II, the leaders hailed momentous changes that have helped bring democracy to the fore.

President Bush, who is to meet with Yeltsin Saturday at the presidential retreat at Camp David, Md., said the two would discuss arms-reductions measures to augment deep cuts already agreed on.

"Our world is still a dangerous world, ripe with far too many weapons," he said.

Yeltsin, for his part, indicated readiness to push ahead with cuts in arms, including the devastatingly powerful multiple-warhead missiles, and called for a global nuclear defense system along the lines of U.S. "Star Wars" system.

After the summit, Yeltsin invited the United States and other nuclear powers to take part in the space-based defense system. He also said former Soviet nuclear technicians will work on the project "to keep them from drifting abroad."

Yeltsin's most animated moment was an appeal to the West for immediate aid to the struggling Commonwealth of Independent States.

"This is the last opportunity to defend democracy, the world has to know that," said Yeltsin.

The summit was derided by some as little more than an expensive photo-opportunity, but participants issued a declaration on collective security, arms control and nuclear non-proliferation. The declaration was not binding; only resolutions carry legal weight. Still, a statement backed by the leaders was likely to help chart future U.N. actions.

The declaration asked Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali to prepare a report by July 1 on strengthening peacekeeping, which could include creating a standing U.N. army.

The declaration, over the objections of China, mentioned the virtues of democracy and human rights.

Bush met with Li later Friday for about 30 minutes. Details of what transpired were not immediately available.

Leader of the only nation to use nuclear weapons in war, Bush said he would search for common ground on slashing stockpiles when he meets Russian President Boris N. Yeltsin at Camp David Saturday.

Yeltsin, speaking just before Bush, gave every indication he was eager to cooperate. He said that together, the two states are capable of making the project of minimum defense a fundamental law of existence.

The United States and Russia are not only partners, but allies, he said.

But lurking behind all the optimism were references to the maladies that stand in the way of a new world order even if, somehow, the nuclear genie can be stuffed back into the bottle.

King Hassan II of Morocco, eye-catching in a desert robe and hood, deplored the growing indebtedness that besets many nations and galloping population growth.

He singled out Palestinian Arabs among all the world's peoples as unjustly deprived of a homeland.

Yeltsin spoke of "all of us weighed down by an enormous burden of mistrust."

And Bush referred to the scourge of terrorism and singled out Iraqi President Saddam Hussein for what has become a familiar blast of condemnation.

But the overwhelming sentiment was one of hope, and on the day of this exceptional summit meeting it enveloped the United Nations like a shining light.

Ulysses starts 17-day Jupiter fly-by

PASADENA, Calif. — The Ulysses spacecraft started a 17-day encounter with Jupiter on Friday, taking readings while it zooms in to use the giant planet as a gravity slingshot so it can study the sun's poles.

"It's an exciting event that we've been looking forward to for 16 months. We're glad it's here," said Don Meyer, NASA's deputy mission operations manager at Jet Propulsion Laboratory.

The $750 million NASA-European Space Agency mission literally will reach a turning point at 4 a.m. PST Feb. 8.

That's when Ulysses makes its closest approach to the solar system's largest planet, flying within 235,000 miles of the cloud tops.

Wuornos

DELAND, Fla. — Hitchhiking prostitute Aileen Wuornos, saying she was wrongly branded a serial killer, was sentenced Friday to die in the electric chair for one of seven Florida highway slayings.

"Law enforcement has labeled me a serial killer purposefully, for books and movies," Wuornos tearfully told a judge before sentencing. "I'm no serial killer."

Later, as deputies put Wuornos in a vehicle transporting her to death row in southern Florida, she yelled to bystanders: "Bust these crooked cops and their conspiracy, please! I'm innocent!"

Study: Herpes risk exists without signs

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Sexual partners of people with genital herpes have a 10 percent annual risk of infection, even when there are no signs of the disease's blisters and rashes, a study suggests.

"There is no time when you know it's safe," said the study's lead author, Dr. Gregory Mertz of the University of New Mexico.

The risk of contracting herpes from a partner without symptoms was not known until now, according to the authors of the study published in Saturday's Annals of Internal Medicine, based in Philadelphia.

The infection risk for men was about 6 percent, while the risk for women known not to be infected with the herpes simplex virus was 32 percent, a difference commonly seen in sexually transmitted diseases, according to the study.

Cholesterol has unexpected danger

PHOENIX — Researchers believe they have discovered a new hazard of high cholesterol: spasms in blood vessels that trigger dangerous ministrokes. And they say lowering cholesterol may be urgent after such attacks.

Doctors have long known cholesterol plays a role in strokes, but besides clogging arteries, cholesterol also makes blood vessels more likely to squeeze suddenly shut, a new study suggests.

Researchers from the University of Iowa reported evidence Friday that cholesterol sets off a hazardous chain reaction in the blood stream. It appears to lead to ominous ministrokes called transient ischemic attacks, or TIAs, and perhaps to full-blown strokes.

Debt, recession drive TWA to bankruptcy

Icahn

NEW YORK (AP) — Trans World Airlines, the once-proud international aviation giant that ran into hard times amid deregulation and a takeover by financier Carl C. Icahn, landed in bankruptcy court Friday.

TWA became the sixth large U.S. airline to file for Chapter 11 protection over the last few years. Three of them — Eastern, Pan Am and Midway — didn't survive.

Industry analysts say TWA's odds aren't good. But TWA said it foresaw no disruptions in service or frequent-flyer awards and anticipated no layoffs or asset sales.

TWA's bankruptcy is a vivid example of the severe financial plight confronting the nation's airlines — and it also shows how some of the high-profile takeovers of the bustling 1980s have soured.

Although Icahn remains chairman for now, he could lose control of TWA.

Icahn said at a news conference that his 90-percent stake in TWA will go mostly to bondholders. Some also will get a fraction of the cash they're owed.

Icahn will get back a stake of between 20 percent and 40 percent, because he, too, owns some bonds that have been in default.

He estimated his personal losses at $130 million to $200 million. "This has not been one of my stellar investments," he said.

The bankruptcy filing in Wilmington, Del., listed assets of $2.68 billion and liabilities of $3.47 billion.

Icahn said he has already cut deals with most creditors and TWA's biggest union, the International Association of Machinists, and hopes to get TWA out of bankruptcy court in six months.

Industry observers and some of TWA's workers weren't so sure.

Many are skeptical of Icahn's motives because he has sold important overseas routes to raise cash.

TWA's predicament resembles problems Pan American World Airways faced when it went into bankruptcy about a year ago.

For decades, TWA and Pan Am dominated international traffic, while rivals got most of the domestic routes. When the industry was deregulated in 1978, carriers with strong domestic route systems thrived. Pan Am and TWA sold their choicest overseas routes — to London's Heathrow Airport — to United and American.

Cheney puts up a fight on deeper defense cuts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Dick Cheney sought to hold the line Friday against congressional demands for deeper cuts in the military than President Bush has proposed since the collapse of the Soviet Union.

"If we try to reduce the force too quickly, we can break it," Cheney argued in his first appearance before Congress since the release of the department's fiscal 1993 defense blueprint.

The chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Gen. Colin Powell, put it in blunter terms.

"We exist to fight. We're not a social agency. We exist to go kick someone's butt, if necessary. I believe if you look like you can kick someone's butt, most often it will not be necessary. Gentlemen, don't lose this, don't break this," Powell told the Senate Armed Services Committee.

In a day of testimony on Capitol Hill, Bush administration officials defended the president's spending plan for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1 against Democratic criticisms.

Cheney and Powell defended their $286 billion defense plan that curbs or cancels several major weapons, including the B-2 bomber and Seawolf submarine, while making no additional cuts in troop levels beyond the 25 percent reduction by 1995.

Under the plan, troop levels will drop from current totals of about 2 million to 1.6 million while the number of uniformed men and women in Europe will fall to 150,000 from the 1990 total of 314,000.

Responding to the grumbling in Congress that the military is trimming its ranks too slowly since the fall of Communism, Cheney recited a litany of major security threats this century that were unforeseen.

After World War II, for example, the United States rapidly shrunk its military only to be "nearly pushed off the Korean peninsula by a third-rate power" four years later. "We paid dearly for our rush to disarm," he said.

A repeat of that miscalculation, he said, could diminish U.S. military credibility and serve as an invitation for a hostile power to fill the vacuum.

Ex-official sentenced

WASHINGTON (AP) — Retired CIA official Alan D. Fiers was given probation Friday and ordered to perform 100 hours of community service for withholding information from Congress in the Iran-Contra scandal.

"I accept full responsibility for my actions taken or not taken and stand here fully accountable for them," said Fiers, who was praised by prosecutors for cooperating.

Stocks fall Friday, but January gain offers traders hope for year

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Stock prices fell Friday, yielding to a round of selling near the close of an erratic session.

The market finished January with a gain, cheering traders who look to the first month of the year for clues to what course it might follow over the next 11 months.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 21.47 points to 3,223.39, finishing the week with a net loss of 9.39 points.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 5 to 4 on the New York Stock Exchange.

Volume on the New York Stock Exchange came to an estimated 197.60 million shares as of 4 p.m. EST, against 194.67 million in the previous session.

Analysts said the latest economic news did little to sort out traders' mixed feelings about the business outlook.

The Commerce Department reported that the index of leading economic indicators dropped 0.3 percent in December, matching its decline of the month before.

That drop in the index, which is designed to detect future economic trends, seemed to further postpone any prospect of a sustained recovery in business conditions.

Analysts said it also was seen as increasing the chances that the Federal Reserve might soon decide to give interest rates another downward push.

For January as a whole, the Dow Jones industrial average climbed 54.56 points, or 1.72 percent.

That produced a positive reading for the so-called January barometer, an indicator whose merits are disputed but which nevertheless gets a lot of attention on Wall Street.

Insurance stocks declined broadly on a proposal in the Bush administration's economic package that would eliminate a key tax break on new annuities sold to individuals.

Aetna Life & Casualty dropped 2½ to 41½; Conseco 7 to 68½; Broad Inc. 2½ to 17½, and Travelers Corp. 1½ to 21½.

Yeltsin

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Russian President Boris Yeltsin on Friday suggested the creation of a worldwide anti-missile shield and offered to curb the world's deadliest nuclear missiles.

Yeltsin gave few details. But in his first appearance at a major international event, he seemed to be emulating Mikhail Gorbachev's style of high-profile offers on arms and pledges on human rights.

It was considered unlikely that Yeltsin's debut at the United Nations would affect his popularity at home, where he has been heckled for enacting tough economic reforms.

In saying he would agree to cut back on multiple-warhead missiles, Yeltsin appeared to be responding to arms control offers President Bush made in his State of the Union speech. Bush made the U.S. moves conditional on Yeltsin curbing the warheads. It was not clear if Yeltsin's offer was also conditional.

The two leaders are expected to discuss the details Saturday at Camp David, Md. U.S. Secretary of State James A. Baker III, however, told a news conference Friday in New York it's not contemplated that in a three or four-hour meeting that they will work out all the details of the various arms control proposals."

The United States has been seeking a reduction or elimination of multiple-warhead missiles, or MIRVs, for years, and Yeltsin's comment was the most direct on the subject by the keeper of the former Soviet arsenal.

Shortly after he arrived at the United Nations and sat down for a brief meeting with Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali, a reporter asked Yeltsin if he would reduce the number of warheads on long-range missiles.

"We would," Yeltsin said without elaborating. He suggested the issue would be discussed, possibly at Camp David.

MIRVs carry the former Soviet Union's most potent land-based missiles. Each of these warheads can be aimed at separate targets. The arsenal includes the SS-18, SS-19 and SS-24, the latter based on rail cars. The SS-18 has 10 warheads, the SS-19 six. The number on the SS-24 was not immediately known.

The missiles, considered of potential use in a first strike, are based in Ukraine, Russia and Kazakhstan.

Among the MIRVs in the U.S. arsenal are the Minuteman III, which carry three nuclear warheads.

Bush had been waiting for an answer from Yeltsin on the multiple-warhead issue since he proposed their reduction Tuesday in his State of the Union speech.

Yeltsin's U.N. debut put him in the brightest spotlight of his career. As a former Communist Party official and civil engineer, he has no foreign policy experience, but was thrust Friday into meetings with leaders of Japan, India, China and France, as well as the Security Council summit.

Algerian forces fire on Muslims

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — Security forces opened fire Friday on Muslim worshipers leaving a mosque, wounding eight, witnesses and officials said.

It was the worst of a series of clashes between Islamic fundamentalists and the government.

The confrontation came as police cordoned off the Es-Sunna mosque and others in the capital. They also arrested another religious leader and used tear gas to disperse one crowd of youths.

The government has been working to break the political back of the fundamentalists' Islamic Salvation Front in the wake of its first-round victory in parliamentary elections last month.

Tensions have been rising on recent Fridays, the Muslim holy day, because on that day mosques are often used by Front leaders as forums for political messages.

In another development, a small homemade bomb thrown over the wall of the American Embassy on Thursday evening caused minor damage to the roof, the embassy said. There was no claim of responsibility.

At Es-Sunna, in the lower-income neighborhood of Bab el-Oued, police fired warning shots to disperse hundreds of worshipers leaving the mosque, including many young men shouting insults.

Habash now in French custody

PARIS (AP) — President François Mitterrand's government, assailed at home and abroad for allowing George Habash to enter France for medical care, placed the Palestinian guerrilla leader in custody Friday at a Paris hospital.

Authorities said Habash, if deemed fit, would be interrogated about past terrorism cases.

Palestinian leaders demanded the release of Habash, who suffered an apparent stroke on Monday, and said France would be held responsible for his fate. Algeria's state radio accused France of a human rights violation.

In Israel, meanwhile, officials said they were looking into the possibility of requesting Habash's extradition for murder.

Voter registration conflict kills 35

YAOUNDE, Cameroon (AP) — Fighting broke out between members of two northern Cameroon clans during voter registration, resulting in at least 35 deaths, medical sources said Friday.

The violence occurred Wednesday and Thursday in the town of Kousseri, across the Chari River from the Chadian capital of N'djamena, the medical sources said.

Soldiers were sent to the scene and opened fire on the two groups. It was not clear how many of the deaths were caused by the soldiers.

Traffic jam pays off

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — An archaeologist, his car stuck in a traffic jam, passed the time by idly gazing at a nearby road-improvement site. Then his eyes lit up.

Roger Blidmo suddenly recognized the foundations of a village he estimated to be 2,500 years old. They had been unearthed by bulldozers working on a new ring highway around Stockholm.

Judge sets Rhoades' execution date

IDAHO FALLS — A judge has ordered Paul Ezra Rhoades executed Feb. 28 for the 1987 abduction, rape and murder of Idaho Falls schoolteacher Susan Michelbacher, but chances of Rhoades being executed then are slim.

John Radin, an attorney for the Idaho Falls man, said Friday that he expects the U.S. Supreme Court to grant a stay of execution for the condemned triple murderer.

On Jan. 21, the Idaho Supreme Court canceled its March 1989 stay of Rhoades' execution and ordered 7th District Court to issue a death warrant.

Seventh District Judge Ted Wood denied Radin's request for another stay Thursday and set the execution date.

Rhoades, 34, was given two death sentences for the March 1987 slaying of Mrs. Michelbacher, 34. Her body was found in a lava field west of Idaho Falls.

Hospital still can't collect $70,633 bill

BOISE — University of Utah Hospital has lost the latest round in its battle of nearly seven years to collect a bill for $70,633 for treating an Idaho man injured in a farm accident.

The Court of Appeals on Friday upheld a lower court ruling against the hospital, deciding the hospital did not file a medical indigency claim by the deadline.

Terry Searberry was injured in 1984 while working on a Gem County farm when an irrigation pipe he was moving hit a power line. His leg was amputated. He signed a release in 1985 settling his claims against his employer for $100,000.

Group finds employees want privacy

BOISE — A national consumer advocacy group says its knows what lurks in the minds of Idaho workers.

They do not like bosses who pry into their private lives, ask personal questions at job interviews or manipulate their employees, National Consumers League President Linda Golodner said Thursday.

Her group hired a New York firm to interview 632 Idahoans for their attitudes about privacy, knowledge about their rights and whether employers have tried to limit those rights. Idaho was one of five states contacted.

Man faces drug, firearms sentence

MOSCOW — A Bonner County man has been convicted of growing marijuana and protecting his crops with firearms.

Robert Depew, 52, is scheduled to be sentenced May 18. He was convicted Wednesday in federal court in Moscow of growing pot with intent to distribute and two firearms charges.

He faces a minimum 15-year sentence. The prosecution contends he protected his growing operation with a .22-caliber rifle, a single-shot handgun chambered for shotgun shells and a .22-caliber gun made to resemble a pen.

Study: Slag not dangerous after all

POCATELLO — A new federal study refutes allegations that phosphate slag poses a serious health risk for Soda Springs and Pocatello residents.

The radiation advisory committee of the Environmental Protection Agency's science advisory board has found that an earlier study was flawed and that EPA's ban on slag use was "inappropriate," Dan Phallen, the EPA's regional coordinator in Seattle, Wash., said Friday.

Phosphate slag, which contains trace amounts of radioactivity, is a byproduct of refining phosphate ore. The refined ore, after processing, is used to make a number of products, from toothpaste to fertilizer.

Vandalized rail crossings draw inquest

PRESTON — Franklin County sheriff's deputies and Union Pacific Railroad officials have launched an investigation into vandalized railroad crossings.

Vandals destroyed most of the Dayton crossing signal lights on Wednesday, and earlier in the week shot out lights at the Weston crossing.

Railroad crews have repaired or replaced a number of lights from Downey to near Cornish, Utah, over the past few weeks. The latest incident alone caused nearly $1,000 in damages.

Symms, ICL square off on mining reform

POCATELLO (AP) — Sen. Steve Symms, R-Idaho, contends two bills aimed at reforming the 1872 federal Mining Act, increasing claim fees and requiring payment of royalties on mined minerals are attacks on private ownership that would cost thousands of jobs.

Symms

But the Idaho Conservation League said Friday that it supports the legislation and that the existing law is a waste of tax dollars and a threat to the environment.

"We strongly support reform of the mining law," said Mike Medberry, the league's public lands director. "It's the biggest giveaway of public land and public money in existence."

Symms made his comments after a briefing on separate legislation introduced by Sen. Dale Bumpers, D-Ark., and Rep. Nick Rahall, D-W.Va.

"The general mining law gives citizens the right to enter public lands, explore for minerals and, upon their discovery, perfect ownership of the mining location," Symms said. "Without that fundamental principle of ownership, there would be no incentive for exploration and no mining jobs."

Symms said a study by the accounting firm of Coopers & Lybrand and the law firm of Davis, Graham & Stubbs concludes that as many as 30,000 jobs and $230 million in annual income could be lost if Congress approves the bills.

"The bills so thoroughly alter the way minerals may be developed in the United States that they introduce considerable uncertainty to the industry," he said. "The bills shake the very foundation of America's industrial base."

But in citing shortcomings in the existing law, Medberry pointed to health problems in children exposed to lead at the Bunker Hill mine and smelter complex in Kellogg and cyanide leaching into groundwater at the Stibnite gold mine.

Panel OKs H&W nominee amid policy wrangle

BOISE (AP) — After two weeks of delay punctuated by angry protests over punitive administrative regulations, the Senate Health and Welfare Committee has endorsed the reappointment of Health and Welfare Board Chairman Wylla Barsness.

The panel's unanimous vote on Friday came without any discussion, clearing the way for final action on Gov. Cecil Andrus' nominee next week by the full Senate.

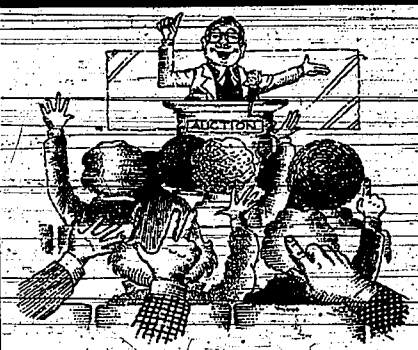

Later in the day, the full Senate confirmed the governor's appointment of Boise businessman John Hayden to the state Board of Corrections.

The Health and Welfare Committee's support for Barsness, a Boise State University professor, underscored the contention by some members that her reappointment to a third four-year term was being used as a focal point for complaints over regulatory actions of the department the board oversees.

Committee members took one last shot at those regulatory policies on Friday, calling in Department Director Richard Donovan to respond to an anonymous letter criticizing mental health care and the agency's escalating payroll.

Donovan acknowledged there has been some dissatisfaction among department employees over changes he has been slowly implementing to move mental care away from medication to active treatment.

Buhl man, 19, dies in motorcycle accident

BUHL — A 19-year-old Buhl man died Friday morning when he was thrown from his motorcycle and slammed into a stop sign post.

Andy Yost was heading north on U.S. Highway 30 five miles west of Buhl when he missed a curve, Idaho State Police Dispatcher Lorrie Oliver said.

He was thrown from his motorcycle and struck the post. He died instantly, Oliver said.

Yost was driving a 1988 Suzuki street cycle and was not wearing a helmet. The cause is still under investigation, she said.

Twin Falls County Coroner Cal Edwards said he did not believe alcohol was involved, but he added that Yost could have been driving too fast.

Cal Butler of Buhl voices his concerns about the proposed hydroelectric developments

A working river?

Board hears comment on Snake hydro projects

By N.S. Nokkentved
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – The Snake River is not a working river; it's a dying river, one man told the Idaho Water Resources Board Friday evening.

Hydroelectric projects have been proposed in three rapids that are the only healthy reaches in the river, said Gene Day at the board's public hearing on the Boulder, Empire and Kanaka rapids projects.

What is the urgency? Day asked. Is it for the 15 megawatts of power or to get approval before state river plans rule it out?

L.B. Industries Inc. of Boise must seek exemption from the interim protected status of the middle reach of the Snake River for the proposed projects.

Protected status prohibits enlargements of existing dams, new dams, diversion works, dredge or placer mining, alteration of stream beds, as well as mineral and sand and gravel extraction.

But the board can be petitioned and would grant an exemption if it deems the project would not harm the qualities for which the river is to be protected – fish and wildlife, recreation, geologic and aesthetic qualities.

Engineer Carl Myers said the projects were designed to minimize environmental effects. Though they have a potential to generate a total of 25 megawatts of electric power, they were reduced to 15 to reduce environmental effects.

A megawatt is one million watts.

Myers said he felt that it was wasting a resource to do that, but it saves other resources, and that makes it worthwhile.

Mark Hill, of Don Chapman Consultants Inc. of Boise, hired by L.B. Industries, said his studies show the projects would have no effect or an insignificant effect on the river. Plans include replacing any wetlands and wildlife habitat lost to the projects, he explained.

But not everyone was sold.

Marilyn Butler, board member of the Clear Lake Country Club, said the projects would aesthetically degrade the last remaining unaltered rapids in the river especially at the nearby Empire Rapids.

The project would be visible from much of the course, she said. She also complained about the lack of information provided by L.B. Industries. She said the meeting on a Friday night conflicted with many civic and school events.

She requested the board to have a hearing near or in Buhl and on a weeknight.

Carl Nellis, Region 4 director of the Idaho Department of Fish and Game, said the projects clearly do not meet the "no impact" criteria.

They could affect white sturgeon, water quality, wildlife and streamside vegetation, Nellis said.

Granting interim protection to the river was done to allow the state to complete plans for the river, he said. The Fish and Game Department requests the board deny the exemptions, Nellis said, to allow the planning process and studies of the river to be completed.

Bill Chisholm of Buhl said he was tired of meetings on the small hydroelectric projects in the Snake River. Instead, the state needs an energy policy and water policy based on conservation, he said.

"How many ways to you have to spell 'No'?" he asked. "Is it the N or the O you don't understand?"

Written comments may be sent till Feb. 28 to Chairman, Idaho Water Resources Board, Statehouse, Boise, Id 83720.

Conservancy signs option to buy Busterback

By Michael Hofferber
Times-News correspondent

KETCHUM – In partnership with the Forest Service and the Bonneville Power Administration, the Nature Conservancy has signed an option to buy the privately owned Busterback Ranch in the Sawtooth Valley from its current owner, Lee Enright.

If successful, the purchase could return water to important salmon spawning beds that have run dry in recent years because of irrigation diversions. And it will likely change the name and use of the cattle ranch south of Stanley.

"We've been trying to negotiate for a number of years to get water into those streams, particularly for andromous fish," said Carl Pence, area ranger for the Sawtooth National Recreation Area which surrounds the ranch property. Andromous fish live in both fresh and salt water.

Enright's water rights allowed him to divert much of the flow of the upper reaches of the Salmon River and Alturas Lake Creek to irrigate Busterback's pastures, effectively drying up large stretches of both streams in late summer when endangered

Ketchum, chief of police reach 'understanding'

By Michael Hofferber
Times-News correspondent

KETCHUM – After meeting in a closed session for nearly 10 hours across two days, Ketchum's Mayor and City Council issued a statement on Friday saying they have come to "a complete understanding" with the chief of police on the operation of his department.

Mayor Dan Hamilton has been at odds with the City Council since Jan. 6 when he refused to appoint city department heads. Hamilton claimed the City Council was trying to oust Police Chief Gal Nevland.

The four members of the City Council, who admitted they had concerns with Nevland's administration of the police department, have asked for an ordinance that would force Hamilton to make department head appointments that they can either confirm or deny.

A first draft of the proposed legislation will be considered at next Monday's City Council meeting.

The City Council called for the special meeting with the police chief Wednesday afternoon that went into executive session and was continued on Thursday.

Chief Nevland has acknowledged council concerns and has pledged to address those concerns in the future," said the statement released Friday.

"All outstanding issues and questions about past policies and procedures of the Ketchum Police Department have been satisfactorily resolved, and both the council and the chief have other pressing business to attend to," the statement continued. "Consequently, both sides look forward to forging a new relationship and improving communications in the future and consider this matter closed."

Official files claim against state, judge

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

JEROME – An Idaho Department of Health and Welfare regional supervisor has filed a tort claim against the state and a magistrate judge in the wake of a flap over detaining a juvenile delinquent.

Anne McNevin, a social worker in charge of the child protection unit of Region IV of Health and Welfare, is asking for $50,000 from the state of Idaho and 5th District Magistrate Thomas R. Cushman of Gooding.

The tort claim, served on Secretary of State Pete Cenarrusa, arose from an incident last summer in which McNevin refused to place a 13-year-old child in temporary detention as ordered by Cushman.

McNevin was then charged with two misdemeanors for her refusal, but those charges were dismissed earlier this month when a judge ruled that Cushman's order was illegal.

Former Idaho Attorney General Jim Jones is representing McNevin. In the tort claim, Jones says McNevin sustained damages as the result of the dispute.

McNevin, who lives in Jerome, was unavailable for comment Friday.

The state has 90 days to respond to the claim. If the claim is denied, McNevin can file suit to recover her damages.

Gould proposes repeal of sales-tax exemption law

By Drew DeSilver
Times-News writer

Gould

Idaho Legislature 1992

BOISE – Buhl Republican Rep. Celia Gould came up with an alternative solution Friday for solving the confusion over sales tax cards for production exemptions.

Let the seller beware.

Gould's proposal, introduced Friday in the House Revenue and Taxation Committee, would repeal the law passed last year creating a sales-tax exemption reporting system that has farmers up in arms.

It would place the burden of enforcing the exemption back on retailers, where it was before Jan. 1.

Under the exemption, most goods bought in order to produce other goods for resale are not subject to sales tax. Until last year, the burden of making sure that only exempt goods were not taxed fell on the seller.

But the 1991 Legislature passed legislation transferring that responsibility to the buyer, and regulations written by the Idaho Tax Commission last year created a tax-exemption card system, complete with a claim form to be filled out at each purchase.

That approach has been roundly denounced by farmers and other buyers of large amounts of goods for resale, and the tax commission has imposed a 60-day moratorium on implementing the system.

Two other bills introduced earlier this week would retain the sales-tax exemption card system but simplify it or replace it by a claim-form system.

HB 519, introduced Wednesday, would keep the cards but eliminate some of the most criticized aspects of the system, including the requirement that purchasers provide their Social Security numbers upon making each exempt purchase. It was drafted by an ad hoc committee that's been working on the issue for several years.

HB 516, also introduced Wednesday, would eliminate the cards. Instead, purchasers would sign a form at each sale accepting responsibility for following the law, and provide his name and address. The bill is sponsored by Gould; Rep. Wally Wright, D-Bayview; and Rep. Golden Linford, R-Rexburg.

Gould told the committee that she still favored the latter approach, but said that some on the panel had wanted to have a repeal bill on the table.

If HB 516 passed but was vetoed by Gov. Cecil Andrus, she said, she would support outright repeal over maintaining the card system in any form.

But State Tax Commissioner Robert Fry took almost exactly the opposite

OK for rim homes irks protester

By H.R. Weitzel
Times-News correspondent

JEROME – The Jerome County Planning and Zoning Commission has approved a couple's proposal to build additional homesites on the north rim of the Snake River Canyon against the wishes of at least one protester.

Phase two of the north rim development plan will add six to ten family-size lots for homes along the rim, according to Andy and Valerie Phillips, who recently requested a special-use permit for the project.

The Phillips plan to build their own home on the property located south of the Jerome Country Club golf courses. The country club borders the plat on the north.

The development will add $98,000 to Jerome County in property taxes over the next ten years, Phillips said.

But Frank Titus, who lives in phase one of the housing area, protested the plan, calling the development helter-skelter.

"We're opening a can of worms with this," he said. "We have only one entrance and don't need more traffic without an egress."

Phase one has 38 vacant lots out of a total of 100 that should be fully developed before opening up phase two, Titus said.

The new housing area would receive water from two wells in the phase one area. Sewerage treatment would be in accordance with state Health Department requirements, Phillips said.

In giving unanimous approval the Commission required an easement to connect the housing area to South Lincoln Road.

Commissioners also approved a request from Rick Eggleston, executive vice president of Pristine Springs, Inc., to construct a hydrogeneration plant to generate electricity from water diverted for fish propagation from a geothermal well on the fish hatchery property.

Joint voter rolls set in Gooding

By Val Cooper
Times-News correspondent

GOODING – An agreement between Gooding County and the city of Gooding regarding joint election registration was approved at the Gooding County Commissioners meeting this week.

In the past, the county conducted separate registration of qualified electors for county elections, and the city had registration of voters for elections within the city.

The county and city have both wanted joint registration a long time, County Clerk John Myers said. It will eliminate duplicate expenses and be more efficient in the voter registration process.

The new system means a person registering to vote with the city clerk's office will automatically be registered to vote in county elections. Meanwhile, voters registering at the county clerk's office will be registered to vote in city elections.

The cost for registrars or other officials conducting the registration will be paid by the county. Computer printing and travel expenditures will be paid by the city for its elections only.

In other business, commissioners district boundaries have been changed to more equally represent populations in various districts.

District 1 or that of Commissioner Don Morrow now represents 3,100 persons, down from 3,500; Commissioner Bob Tupper's District 2 went from 2,129 voters to 2,650. Commissioner Bob Muffley, representing Wendell District 3, was not changed. The district still has 2,500 voters.

Administration wants to tap reserve fund

Idaho Legislature 1992

BOISE (AP) — The Andrus administration advised lawmakers Friday that it needs another $1.3 million from the budget reserve account to keep the current state budget in the black.

The additional money from the so-called "rainy-day fund" is needed to cover $336,000 more in costs for fighting fires last year and nearly $1 million more to reimburse counties for holding state prison inmates, the Division of Financial Management told the chairmen of the Joint Finance-Appropriations Committee.

That will push fire suppression costs over $2.2 million and county jail reimbursement to nearly $2.9 million.

Democratic Gov. Cecil Andrus had originally proposed tapping the $34.5 million budget reserve account for $9.4 million to restore the holdback he imposed last summer to avert a deficit.

Although $6 million of that withheld cash was earmarked for public schools, a number of lawmakers oppose touching the reserve. At the same time, however, many lawmakers, and a majority in the Senate, object to actually reducing the state financial commitment to public education, especially in an election year.

The administrative holdback expired Friday, and budget director Charles Moss said the money was being released to the agencies.

Legislative leaders have put the agencies on notice not to spend the money because there could be an attempt to permanently withhold it. But they conceded they do not have the votes needed to approve any reduction in public school support and possibly none of the other holdbacks as well.

The prospect of any reduction in current state aid to public schools dimmed even more when the administration advised budget writers that it had overestimated the amount available for public education in the new budget year that begins July 1.

While general tax support is the largest contribution and remains unchanged at $501.9 million in the governor's spending blueprint, the administration expected another $35.6 million from the Endowment Fund.

PUC rejects Buhl, Castleford request

The Times-News

BUHL – Buhl and Castleford residents won't be making toll-free calls to Twin Falls after all.

The Idaho Public Utilities Commission has denied a request from residents for toll-free calling, saying it is not needed.

One of the prerequisites for granting toll-free calling is that emergency or other needed services are not available, which is not the case in Buhl and Castleford, PUC officials concluded Friday.

"Buhl/Castleford and Twin Falls do not have common school districts; many county services are located in Buhl or are available without a toll call; numerous retail service centers and goods are available in Buhl, and various medical-related services are available without a toll call," commissioners said in their Friday order.

The commission also said that a substantial number of residents receive a significant discount over normal toll calls by subscribing to U S West's Metropac toll-discount plan. The plan cuts a third off long-distance rates for calls from Buhl and Castleford to Twin Falls.

The PUC staff also estimated that U S West would lose about $500,000 per year in toll revenue that could not be recovered if the request were granted.

In March of last year, the commission received a petition signed by more than 200 Buhl residents requesting extended area service with Twin Falls. An amended petition was later filed to include Castleford.

In June, the commission staff conducted a public meeting in Buhl to discuss the petition and review current types of available telephone service that might result in lower monthly telephone bills. About 75 persons attended that meeting.

Nearly 50 persons attended a hearing in October, with nine testifying in support of toll-free service.

Fund-raising effort aids liver patient

By Bertilia L. Redfern
Times-News correspondent

FILER – Filer residents are raising funds to help a liver transplant victim.

Helen Hoke is undergoing testing for a possible liver transplant at the University of Omaha Transplant Center.

A daughter of Hoke's, Roxanne Berheim, said her mother became ill about six months ago and has been diagnosed as having sclerosis of the liver. Her disease is complicated by diabetes.

Hoke's family has been plagued with liver problems. Her father died of the disease when Hoke was a teenager.

Fund-raising events include a Feb. 7 dance at Tom Park's Pavilion (the 4-H building) at the Filer Fairgrounds. Donations will be taken at the door, and refreshments may be purchased inside.

Records will start spinning at 7:30 p.m. with country-western music and a western swing contest will be at 8:30 p.m. Following the contest, adult contemporary music will be played.

If Helen is accepted as a transplant candidate, it could be weeks or months, before an organ becomes available. Generally, once a patient is stabilized, they are sent home to wait until the transplant can be performed.

Hoke's family is hopeful she will be able to return home before the fund-raising dance.

A friend of the family, Leon Rice, is organizing the event.

He said so far the community has pitched in to help the Hoke family. For instance, Hoke and her husband traveled to Omaha two weeks ago with tickets donated by a resident.

Meanwhile, Filer High School students have raised $227 to help with Hoke's medical expenses.

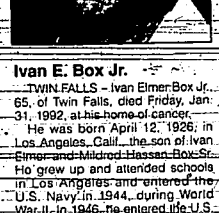

"What the kids at the high school and community have done and are willing to do is tremendous," said Berheim. "It's overwhelming."

Hoke retired recently after 23 years as a custodial employee with the district.

A special account has been set up at West One Bank in Filer, called the Filer Medical Benefit Fund. Contributions can be sent there with specific instructions that the money be used to help Hoke.

Pastor turns himself in to authorities

PAYETTE (AP) — A Payette pastor missing since apparently staging his own abduction Jan. 12 turned himself in to police Friday.

James Kent, 44, whose case was profiled Wednesday night on the syndicated TV program "A Current Affair," was charged with grand theft for allegedly stealing a car to leave the area.

He posted $2,000 bond after appearing before Payette County Magistrate William Dillon but was still being questioned by police Friday evening.

Payette Police Chief Les Cochran said Kent was arrested shortly before 6 p.m. Friday after being reported earlier in the week at an Assembly of God Church in San Antonio, Texas.

An anonymous person called a San Antonio television station Wednesday after recognizing Kent in a promotional spot for the "A Current Affair" segment.

The station called police, but they missed finding Kent by about an hour.

He left the church after becoming aware police were after him and fled so quickly he left a brush, hair dryer and other personal items behind, officials said.

The father of two had been using the alias "James Johnson" and told a minister at the San Antonio church that he was a pastor from Idaho whose entire family had been killed in a car accident.

The minister identified Kent from a police photograph and said Kent was driving a sedan with Idaho license plates that matched the description.

Busterback

...sockeye salmon are swimming upstream to spawn.

After months of failed attempts to find an acceptable substitute for the diversions that would not compromise the valley's scenic beauty but still support a herd of 800 cattle, Enright put the ranch up for sale last fall. His asking price was $4.7 million.

The six-way option announced during a press conference at the SNRA headquarters Friday involves a complicated four-party agreement worth at least $3.2 million.

The Forest Service and the BPA will combine funding sources to purchase all but 80 acres of the ranch, including the water rights. The Nature Conservancy, at the same time, will buy the remaining land with the ranch headquarters and sell it to a private buyer.

Forest Service funding, amounting to $2.4 million, will come from the Land and Water Conservation Fund proceeds already allocated for the purchase.

"But before we can spend it, it must go through a Congressional oversight committee," Pense pointed out. He said he expected action on the proposed expenditure well before the 60-day option expires.

BPA's $800,000 contribution toward the purchase will be spent on the ranch's water rights from monies already budgeted from fisheries mitigation funds for that purpose.

"We're going to buy the water rights and then turn them over to the state of Idaho," explained BPA spokesman Rick Itami. This will ensure that the water stays in the streams for the fish migrations he explained.

The earle is contingent on the Nature Conservancy being able to find a willing buyer for the dude ranch headquarters and its 80 acres, Pence said. He declined to disclose the non-profit group's asking price, while the attorney for Enright Enterprises, Ed Lawson, said the owner was exercising his right to keep the total option price confidential.

If the deal is consummated, the SNRA will take over management of the ranch's 2,201 acres of pastureland. Fencing will be constructed to protect riparian areas, and the pastures will be converted to dryland grazing.

Although Enright grazed up to 1,000 cattle on the acreage each summer, Pence predicted that the SNRA would only allow 200-to-300 animals during a four-month summer period.

"Whoever purchases the base property will have to use it in compliance with the agricultural classification given the property through the SNRA Private Land Regulations," Pence explained.

The classification and easement limits use to activities which are necessary for ranching or dude ranching, much as the ranch has operated in the past. This could include a winter nordic ski operation.

Katie Breckenridge, whose grandparents built the ranch and named it Busterback, appeared at the press conference and asked that its name be changed.

"The name came about because the men and women worked so hard they almost broke their backs," she explained.

Breckenridge asked that the Forest Service and any new owners retire the name Busterback and let it come back into our family.

"That sounds reasonable to me," Pence responded.

Tax

position. HB 519 would simplify the card system but still provide adequate accountability, Fry said, while HB 518 would make it too easy for purchasers to abuse the exemption. Putting the burden back on retailers would be better than that, he said.

"If you're going to repeal the card system, I believe this (new bill) is the way to do it that would not cost the state revenue," he said.

Tim Brennan, president of the Idaho Retailers Association and one of the main backers of the original transfer of responsibility, said he would aggressively oppose the repeal bill.

If it passes, Brennan said, it would demand a "vendor discount" allowing retailers to keep some of the tax they collect as compensation for being liable for taxing non-exempt sales.

"If we go back to the retailer being the policeman and the tax collector for the state, I think we should be able to keep three percent of what we collect," he said.

But Rep. Steve Antone, R-Rupert, chairman of Rev and Tax, said there wasn't much chance Gould's repeal bill would go very far.

Four of the six Democrats on the committee — Wright, Larry Vincent of Pocatello, Claud Judd of Orofino and Harold Reid of Craigmont — voted against printing the bill, which would have blocked its introduction.

The two subcommittees will consider all three bills Monday afternoon.

Computers make it easier to trace family tree

The Associated Press

Seated at a computer terminal in the family history library of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Salt Lake City, Marilyn Anderson, a non-member from Houston, Texas, said, "I've been looking everywhere for Bill."

"He's my great-grandmother's stepbrother," she added, explaining that for years she had hunted some record of him in various parts of the country. "I knew he existed, but I couldn't find any record of him anywhere. ... And now I've finally found him — in Nova Scotia, of all places."

Tracing a family's ancestry, once a slow, painstaking job, has become an easier task now that the huge Mormon collection of genealogical records, the world's largest, has been linked to modern computer technology.

That linkage now extends across the country with computer terminals and data-packed compact disks installed in 1,100 local family history centers of the church. Such facilities eventually are to be provided in 500 other centers abroad.

"You can very quickly ascertain" previously found lines of descent, said Thomas E. Daniels, public information manager for the system. "Research can now be done in minutes, that before took many weeks or months."

The basis for it all is a special belief, a gigantic mountain vault full of microfilmed records, and work still going on around the world to film old church and community registers of past generations.

Access to accumulated results is offered free to all comers.

Leading indicators point from bad to worse

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The government's economic barometer fell in December for the second straight month and even home sales, one of the few recent bright spots, appeared to dim.

"The economy's dead in the water," concluded economist Bruce Steinberg of Merrill Lynch Capital Markets in New York. "Activity is flat to down anywhere you look."

The Commerce Department said Friday its Index of Leading Economic Indicators fell 0.3 percent last month, the same loss it suffered in November. The index is designed to forecast U.S. economic activity six to nine months ahead. "If you believe the leading indicators, there's no real reason to believe the economy is going to come out of it in strong fashion until at least midyear," said Daryl Delano of Cahners Economics in Newton, Mass.

At the same time, the departments of Commerce and Housing and Urban Development reported new home sales slid again in December after two monthly gains.

Sales dropped 6.6 percent last month, to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 522,000, after jumping 7.9 percent in November. Some analysts said the revised November advance from a 3.8 percent gain first reported, made the December loss appear worse than it would have been.

Still, the decline helped to depress 1991 sales to a nine-year low of 504,000 units. Sales had totaled just 412,000 in 1982 as the economy was struggling to emerge from the last recession.

Lenders and buyers reported increased loan applications — for new mortgages as well as refinancings — and traffic through model homes in January. Some analysts said the lowest mortgage rates in nearly two decades should spur further sales, including those of existing homes, which have risen for three months.

In fact, an increase in building permits was the largest positive indicator in the overall index.

But analysts were not so optimistic about the overall economy.

Steinberg suggested, "it's possible that we could see a small decline" in economic growth in the first three months of this year.

"The quarter is not off to a roaring start," he said. "Car sales are down; consumer confidence has fallen; jobless claims have again begun an upward trend so there will be no improvement in the labor market."

Delano agreed. "It'll be the second quarter, late in the second quarter, before we see some good numbers ...," he said. "We won't see them in the next couple of months."

The manufacturing sector, along with housing, had shown signs of strength earlier in the year. Unlike the positive contribution made by building permits, however, most industrial indicators in the index were down.

These included a drop in orders for new plants and equipment; falling orders for consumer goods; a decrease in unfilled factory orders, suggesting slack demand, and faster delivery times, which indicate declining orders.

Other negatives were a drops in the monetary supply-and-in-an-index measuring consumer confidence. The index continued to fall in January, it was announced Friday.

30-year mortgage rates rise again

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Thirty-year, fixed-rate mortgages rose to an average of 8.68 percent this week, the third consecutive increase, according to a national survey released Friday.

The rate was up from 8.56 percent last week and the highest since fixed rates bottomed at 8.23 percent in the week ending Jan. 10, according to the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. survey.

The 8.23 percent was the lowest since rates averaged 8.18 percent during the week ending July 27, 1973.

That would be well below the 18.63 percent peak during the week ending Oct. 16, 1987.

On one-year adjustable rate mortgages, lenders were asking an average initial rate of 5.93 percent, up from 5.90 percent last week. It also was the third weekly increase for ARMs rates, which bottomed at 5.79 percent during the week ending Jan. 10.

The rates do not include add-on fees known as points.

RIVERSIDE, Calif. – The Idaho School for the Deaf and Blind will play today for the boys' championship of the Western State Classic basketball tournament.

The Redskins defeated Phoenix Day School for the Deaf 50-41 in Friday's semifinals. Cory Stoddard of Pocatello scored 15 and Rick McCabe of Filer 13 to lead ISDB.

ISDB plays Cal-Riverside or Cal-Fremont for fourth place today.

PGA bans Swedish golfer Tumba for altering score card

VIRGINIA WATER, England — Swedish golfer Johan Tumba was banned for 10 years by the PGA European Tour Friday for altering his scorecard.

A tour disciplinary hearing determined that Tumba broke the rules while playing the second round of a pre-qualifying tournament at the Queirwaters club last Sept. 18.

Tumba's opponent on that day, Englishman Ian Roper, charged that the Swede changed two 5s on his scorecard to 4s, which gave him a 72 instead of a 74. That would have put Tumba into a tournament at Montpellier, France.

Sharp-shooting Wolverines sweep CSI, end streak

By Larry Hovey

TWIN FALLS — It's over.

The 137-game home court winning streak. The No. 1 ranking in the nation.

For the second time this season, the Utah Valley Wolverines — becoming the first junior college team to sweep CSI since Coach Fred Trenkle's first season here nine years ago — knocked the Golden Eagles off the No. 1 national ranking.

Women win – D2

Hitting 36 of 47 free throws and totally deadly from the line in the last five minutes, the Wolverines beat up the Eagles 84-68.

But the important thing is still there.

With Eastern Utah defeating North Idaho 82-77, CSI remains tied for the Scenic West Conference lead and the chase for the No. 1 ranking in the regional playoffs. The Eagles come back at 7:30 p.m. today to take on Salt Lake Community College.

"Put it on the front page because it's only news when we lose," said Trenkle philosophically.

Utah Valley Coach Duke Reed, who had lost 26 straight to Trenkle and CSI until a home win in December, said "I thought we played smart and executed the game plan. They are quicker and stronger but we stayed with the plan and it paid off."

"Give Utah Valley credit. They played smart. When they got ahead they went to the spread and you know you can't put a solid team like that on the line and expect them to miss."

In the second half, Brian Santiago hit 13 of 15 free throws while Mike Raiser hit 11 of 12. In fact, those two combined for six straight charities — thanks to a technical foul — with 1:25 left that opened the lead to 79-63.

CSI couldn't stop Santiago in the forecourt, and Utah Valley overpowered the Eagles underneath. Although both teams scored just 22 field goals, the difference in outside ball handling and rebounding showed through.

In the second half, CSI managed only seven rebounds — three on offense — but Utah Valley wasn't missing many shots. The Wolverines had 14 second-half rebounds — three on their end.

For the night, CSI was 22-55 while Utah Valley was 22-47.

Trenkle seemed to have a premonition of the loss prior to the game noting "when you have a good team, it takes something crazy to throw them into a mental state where they can't concentrate."

That referred to the continuing security measures following two bomb scares on the campus this week.

"It's tough to practice when there are (trained explosive) dogs sniffing around the gymnasium every day. Our school attendance dropped about

Homer leads Wolverines past Tigers

By Michael Hollerbach
Times-News correspondent

HAILEY – Playing their final home game of the season, the Wood River Wolverines treated a standing-room-only crowd to an exciting 50-47 win over the Jerome Tigers Friday night.

Led by Brian Homer's 25-point performance, Wood River (12-6) overcame a rough first half to stop Jerome (11-5), which twice held a sizeable lead in the game.

While the Wolverines missed their first six shots from the field, the Tigers charged to a 9-0 lead in the first quarter with senior guards Bret Walter and Mark Holtzen both burying a pair of jump shots.

Unforced turnovers kept Jerome from widening the gap. The Tigers gave away the ball seven times in the first quarter and 16 times on the game. Wood River had 10 turnovers during the contest.

Homer took charge with 2:30 remaining in the quarter and sank three consecutive three-point shots and two free throws to tie the score at 11-11. The Wolverines then built up an 18-11 lead before the Tigers clawed their way back.

In the last five minutes of the first half, Jerome outscored Wood River 15-1 behind the sharpshooting of Walter, who scored 24 points overall. At the half, they led 26-19.

The evenly matched teams traded the lead five times in the second half, before Wolverine point guard David Morgan sank a 3-pointer at 2:19 that broke a 41-41 tie. Soon after, he was fouled on a steal and converted a pair of free throws.

Down 46-41, Jerome committed another of its costly turnovers that led to an easy bucket by Wood River's Travis Williams.

Nintendo lottery gizmo muddles Mariners' deal

Seattle Times

SEATTLE — Reports that Nintendo manufactures equipment that can be used for legalized gambling have raised questions about baseball's acceptance of a Seattle group's offer to buy the Mariners.

Nintendo, which has pledged $75 million toward the team's purchase and operation, has manufactured computer equipment that allows users to play legalized lottery games at home.

In the United States, the equipment is still at the prototype stage. It was proposed for use in Minnesota, where it was withdrawn amid objections that the system could not be made childproof.

A spokesman for Control Data Corp., a computer firm that operates the Minnesota lottery, said his company asked Nintendo to help develop an on-line lottery system. No state lottery has approved its use, and Control Data has no plans to market the system further, said Ott Brown, a Control Data vice president.

Emtman opts for NFL

The Associated Press

SEATTLE — All-America defensive tackle Steve Emtman said money wasn't the main reason he decided to pass up his senior season at Washington to enter the NFL draft.

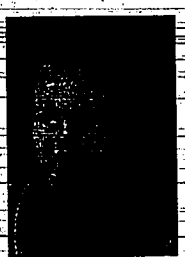

Nevertheless, the 6-foot-5, 290-pound junior likely will become a rich man when he is selected in the NFL draft April 26-27.

If Emtman is the first overall selection in the draft, as some people expect, he probably would receive a five-year contract worth between $8 million and $9 million, including a signing bonus of $3.8 million to $4 million.

Russell Maryland, a 6-3, 274-pound defensive tackle from Miami, was the first pick in the 1991 draft by Dallas and received a five-year, $7.9 million contract, with a $3.6 million signing bonus.

"The main deciding factor was that of personal challenge," Emtman said Friday. "I feel I am at the top of my game at the collegiate level and want to challenge myself at a higher level. I want it understood that this is not an issue of money but rather the opportunity to fulfill a lifelong dream of playing pro football."

Emtman appears headed to the Indianapolis Colts, who have the first two picks in the draft. He said he would have no problems going to Indianapolis although the Colts had a league-worst 1-15 record last season.

NBA honors 'The Hawk'

3 decades after basketball banned Connie Hawkins from the game, it elects the all-star to Hall of Fame

The Associated Press

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. — Connie Hawkins, who was banished by basketball 30 years ago in a gambling scandal, Friday was awarded the sport's highest honor — election to the Hall of Fame.

"I don't know what to say. I'm speechless," said Hawkins, who has long maintained his innocence.

"The Hawk" grew up on the playgrounds of Brooklyn, N.Y., and his swooping dunks and high-flying acrobatics changed the game. He was one of five players — including two women — plus three former coaches and Lou Carnesecca of St. John's to be elected in basketball's centennial year.

Lusia Harris, a 6-foot-3 center who led Delta State to three national championships during the 1970s, and Nera White, who led her Nashville-based AAU team to 10 national championships and one world championship during the 1930s and 1960s, were the first women players elected into the Hall.

The Hall of Fame's first three women, including Margaret Wade, Harris' coach at Delta State, were inducted in 1985.

The other players to be inducted May 11 will be center Bob Lanier from St. Bonaventure, who had a 14-year pro career with Detroit and Milwaukee, and Sergei Belov, one of the greatest international players of all time. Belov led the Soviet national team to four European and two world championships and the gold medal at the 1972 Olympics.

"You keep pinching yourself," Lanier said. "You always think the Hall of Fame is like for old guys who played a long time ago. So to be part of that — to be actually in it — I'm floating."

Wendell wrestler chases 4th straight crown

By Ron Gates
Times-News writer

WENDELL — While less accomplished wrestlers struggled for consolation berths at last month's Buhl Invitational Tournament, Wendell junior Chris Chandler passed the time of day with mates from other schools.

And why not?

He was, after all, about to win his 10th consecutive match-and-third tournament title of the still-young season.

The warmth, though, disappears immediately after the prematch handshake.

For the next six or so minutes his opponent represents an obstacle on Chandler's march to Class A-3, 135-pound state championship. As such, that particular foe warrants the full extent of his fury.

"He's serious," said Trojan Coach Steve Matthews. "He's been that aggressive ever since he was a freshman. Chris really came on strong the last part of last year. I wish I had a half dozen more just like him."

"I like being everybody's friend," said the stocky 5-foot, 7-inch blond who will celebrate his 17th birthday a week from today. "Until I get on the mat. Then they're an enemy, more or less."

Former teammate Harvey Ramirez, now graduated, brought home the state silver medal at that same weight in 1991 while Chandler had to be content with the 125-pound bronze.

The then Trojan soph prevailed in four of five matches, losing 4-3 to eventual champion Kirk Willie, a Malad senior who was runner-up at 119 the previous year. In the semifinals,

"There's no doubt that the title was decided right there in that semifinal match," Matthews added. "Willie flat out manhandled Teton's Bart Birch in the championship match. I know Chandler would really like to wrestle him, if just to prove a point."

"Willie beat him by 10 points," Chris remembered. "I wish I could have wrestled Birch, but I'll see him at state."

Tournament triumphs in Tremonton, Utah and Soda Springs — for good measure he contributed six points to Wendell's total in a dual at Malad the night before the latter — preceded Chandler's Buhl victory.

A state qualifier at 119 pounds his freshman year, Chandler compiled a 2-2 mark.

He lost a quarterfinal decision to Birch, who went on to take third place, and was eliminated by fifth-place Jason Godina, a Parma senior, two matches into the consolation round.

Bryan Holman, last season's state 135-pound champ and Sugar-Salem teamate and medalist Heath Wood stepped up a classification, so they like Willie won't be in the way when state comes up in March. Birch and Chandler, meanwhile, Church are among the most likely candidates to make Chandler's hit list at Moscow.

Chandler, who upped his slate to 12-0 in Friday's portion of the annual Magic Valley Invitational, opens today's semis against a Pocatello wrestler.

Taking on a member of the Indians' two-time state championship team would be enough for most. There is, however, another in the field.

"Jerome senior Guy Bullock is at 135," Chandler explained. "He's seeded second, but I was seeded first. That should be an interesting match."

A couple-of-toughies indeed, but exactly the kind of competition the Wendell youngster needs to prepare for his biggest challenge.

"I've never told him, but I expect Chris to be in the state finals," Matthews confided.

"I'm not putting any pressure on him to get there, but I'm sure he thinks he will be."

"I hope I can do it to help coach Matthews," Chandler responded.

"He's only had the one state champ at Wendell. He's had a lot of faith in me, I'd like, to be the school's first two-time state champ just to repay him."

CSI women down 5th-ranked UV

By Larry Hovey
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Free throws — and what is becoming the usual diet of outside shooting — allowed the College of Southern Idaho women to post perhaps their biggest win ever Friday night.

Hitting 31 of 49 free throw attempts, Coach Ben Stroud's women knocked off previously-undefeated and nationally-fifth-ranked Utah Valley 80-64.

It was the 13th straight victory for CSI since it dropped a decision to Utah Valley in Orem in early December.

The victory enhances CSI's chances of grabbing one of six spots in the Region 18 playoffs in March. "We seemed to be playing scared early," said Stroud "But then we steadied later in the half (for a 36-30 lead). Then we started the second half the same way until we could get a timeout and get into some ears. After that we executed well."

The victory was built on good second half play with the big difference probably being the 16-point and rebounding performance of sophomore Kristie Brown who enjoyed her best night of the year.

Top guns Shirley Stepan and Sharleece Keller remained steady with 18 apiece. Keller and Brown helped CSI overcome a 47-42 disadvantage early in the second period and turn it into six and eight-point lead. Then in the closing minutes, Stepan and Amy Boone came up with steals and points to move it away.

Stroud said he felt the main difference was "Shar hit enough shots to keep them in man defense. I felt later in the game she was on the verge of really heating up," he said of his Arco sharpshooter.

The Eagles couldn't contain Melanie Francis inside as she gathered up 24 points.

CSI ended a seesaw first half when Tammy Clark hit a three-point and Brown and Keller quickly hiked the lead to 32-25.

But early in the second half, Kim Bird reeled off seven straight points as Utah Valley took a 47-42 lead. Valezi and Brown then shot CSI back on top and Keller and Brown hit two points each and Valezie three to move ahead 55-47. Utah Valley wasn't closer than five after that.

CSI remains in action tonight, hosting Salt Lake Community at 5:15 p.m.

Big win gives Bruins shot at trip to state

By Mike Maller
Times-News sports editor

TWIN FALLS — All 10 Twin Falls girls scored to treat their crowd to a 73-24 rout of Minico in the Bruins' final home game of the season Friday night.

The victory sends Twin Falls into today's 7:30 p.m. Region III basketball tournament semifinal at Highland in Pocatello. The winner there is guaranteed a trip to the state 4-A tournament in Coeur d'Alene. A loss ends either team's season. "It's nice to finish this way in the gym and be sky high going into the most important game of the season," said Twin Falls Coach Karen Kohring.

Lindsey Neiwert and Mignon Quigley scored in the final 32 seconds to get everyone in the book for the Bruins. At the top end, Myndee Larsen and Shannon Phillips scored 13 each. Ashley Mayes added 10 points.

But, as Minico Coach Kelly Arnitt pointed out, "They'll have to play this well tomorrow night to stay close to Highland. (The Rams) are a great team."

"We have to take this feeling of playing well, playing together, this momentum that our offense can score," Kohring said. "That's what happened to us with Highland. Our offense didn't rise to the occasion."

Minico held the Bruins to nine points two after the first two minutes, in the first quarter. But with the Spartans having problems finding the basket all game, those nine points were good for a lead of eight.

The Spartans hit the first four points of the second period to close to 9-5. Twin Falls went on a 13-2 run to build a cushion it never lost.

"We didn't start off that bad," Arnitt said, "We couldn't get any shots to go down, and it just snowballed.

With a minute left on the clock, Walters put the Tigers within striking range with his fourth three-point goal. But he fouled out on a charging call with 13 seconds remaining and the Wolverines leading 48-44.

Homer and Walter dominated the scoreboard for their respective teams, tallying more than half the game's points.

Burr Hamilton scored 10 for Jerome, as did Morgan for Wood River.

After finishing the season with a 10-0 record on its home court, the Wood River team travels to Buhl next Friday. A win in that game will give the Wolverines top seed in the Fourth District 4-2 tournament that begins Feb. 18.

50 percent this week (after some kind of device was found in an academic building). When things like that get started, it can really snowball," the coach said.

"Every team has three or four games like this a year. We've been lucky because we usually only have one or sometimes two. Now maybe our fans will understand what it takes to win under the type of pressure we've had for several years and everytime we go on the road," the coach said.

"It just wasn't supposed to be. A game like this happens. We've never had better athletes. Said the coach who just walked off this floor a loser in December of 1984.

The big jump in the game started with a 43-43 tie. Raiser sent Utah Valley ahead to stay with two-free throws with 1:53 to play and followed quickly with a layup off a steal. Santiago's three-point stretched it to 50-39.

CSI rallied back to within 52-48 over the next two minutes and the free throw parade started. Utah Valley scored 19 of its final 27 points from the charity stripe and one field goal was a good tend.

"We didn't play hard enough on defense or execute our offense well enough. Utah Valley had something to do with that. They won," Trenkle said.

UCLA sophomore opts for NFL draft

LOS ANGELES — UCLA quarterback Tommy Maddox, who figured to be one of the finest at his position the next two seasons had he stayed in college, instead opted Friday to make himself available for this spring's NFL draft.

Meanwhile, standout wide receiver Sean Lacheta had decided to do the same thing, but changed his mind at the last minute and will return to UCLA for his senior season next summer.

Maddox, 20, completed 209 of 343 passes (60.9 percent) for 2,681 yards and 16 touchdowns with 16 interceptions for the Bruins last season. UCLA finished the year 9-3 record, including a 6-3 victory over Illinois in the John Hancock Bowl. Maddox, a 6-foot-4, 195-pounder from Bedford, Texas, redshirted the 1989 season before beginning his college career with the Bruins in 1990.

He said one of the main reasons he decided to make himself available for the draft at this time was there won't be many outstanding quarterbacks available outside of Houston's David Klingler.

Foreman will fight Stewart in April

LAS VEGAS — Former heavyweight champion George Foreman will return to the ring April 11 against Alex Stewart in the first fight ever in the 19,500-seat UNLV campus arena.

Promoter Bob Arum said the 44-year-old Foreman will receive $5 million for the fight, his second since losing a bid for the heavyweight title last April against Evander Holyfield.

James Toney will defend his middleweight title on the same card against Glenn Wolfe of Miami, Arum said.

The fight will be sponsored by the Las Vegas Hilton, but will be held at the Thomas and Mack Arena where the UNLV basketball team plays.

Olympic committee defends sex tests

COURCHEVEL, France — The International Olympic Committee on Friday defended its sex test for female athletes competing in the Winter Games, dismissing charges that the procedure was unethical.

"We have been very surprised that this controversy has developed just days before the Games," IOC spokeswoman Michele Verdier said. "We are not introducing anything new. We have had this testing since 1968."

The test, which involves analysis of hormones in saliva, is intended to prevent men from masquerading as women athletes.

Controversy arose this week when a group of prominent French scientists and France's committee on medical ethics condemned the test as discriminatory, medically flawed and a violation of privacy.

But Verdier said, "It is not for the IOC to decide who is a man and who is a woman. We just want to make sure that athletes compete under fair conditions and to protect the rights of the athletes."

BYU's Bradley gains weight on mission

SALT LAKE CITY — What 7-foot-6 Shawn Bradley couldn't do as a freshman basketball phenomenon at Brigham Young, he's finally doing as a Mormon missionary to Australia.

He's gaining weight.

After struggling to maintain a scant 210 pounds on his bony frame while leading BYU into the NCAA playoffs last year, Bradley is now 30 pounds heavier. "I was surprised, with his metabolism," said Bradley's father, Reiner. "He put it on pretty quick. The first part of his mission he was in Australia (Sydney) ward with a lot of Polynesians, and they fed him pretty well."

In January, the 19-year-old Bradley was transferred 200 miles north to the ranching community of Tamworth. For the first time in his life, he's not growing taller, but he hopes to keep adding pounds before his two-year mission ends in May 1993.

BYU coach Roger Reid is elated. "Thirty pounds? That's great! Anything he can get is going to help," he said. "But what he really needs is 60, 70 or even 80 pounds."

NHL welcomes Japanese investment

TAMPA, Fla. — The NHL welcomed Japanese investment in the Tampa Bay Lightning, and a lawyer for the expansion franchise says the NHL's acceptance of foreign ownership is a sign of times to come.

"I don't think there's any question that we're headed for a global economy," said David LeFevre, also attorney for Kokusai Green Co. Ltd., which reportedly has a 60-percent stake in the Lightning, one of two new teams that will begin play next fall.

"I think you'll see cross-ownership in every part of everybody's life," LeFevre added Friday. "I think 20 years from now nobody's going to care."

Bonds signs with Bucs for 1 year

NEW YORK (AP) — Barry Bonds and the Pittsburgh Pirates agreed Friday to a $4.7 million, one-year contract and left open the question of whether the outfielder will file for free agency after the season.

Bonds, who had lost in salary arbitration the last two years, got the highest one-year deal in baseball history, topping Cecil Fielder's $4.5 million deal with Detroit on Tuesday.

Bonds is seeking to top the $29 million, five-year contract that Bobby Bonilla got when he left the Pirates last fall to sign with the New York Mets. Friday's agreement left it unclear whether Pittsburgh would still attempt to sign him to a multiyear contract. Pirates officials were unavailable and Bonds' agent, Rod Wright, did not return telephone messages.

Eight other players in arbitration agreed Friday to one-year deals, reducing the total remaining to 88.

Outfielder Jim Eisenreich, who became a free agent last fall and then accepted Kansas City's offer of salary arbitration, split the difference the Royals and settled at $1.65 million. Kevin Seitzer, who lost his starting job last year at third base for Kansas City, agreed with the Royals at $1,625,000, the same salary he made in 1991.

Reliever Tim Crews and Los Angeles agreed to $1,175,000, a raise of $505,000, while shortstop Jeff Blauser and Atlanta settled at $925,000, a raise of $645,000.

Reliever Norm Charlton and Cincinnati settled at $1.1 million, a raise of $475,000, while first baseman Ricky Jordan and Philadelphia agreed to $660,000, a raise of $410,000.

Reserve catcher John Marzano and Boston settled at $350,000, a raise of $150,000, while outfielder Shawn Abner and California agreed to $287,500, a raise of $107,500.

In addition, free agent left-hander Jerry Don Gleaton and the Royals agreed to a minor-league contract with Omaha of the American Association. Gleaton, who made $510,000 last season with Detroit, would get a $400,000 major league contract if he makes the team and the chance to earn another $200,000 in performance bonuses.

And left-hander Dennis Rasmussen and the Baltimore Orioles agreed to a minor-league contract with Rochester of the International League.

Among players not eligible for arbitration, outfielder Wes Chamberlain and the Phillies agreed at $200,000, a raise of $95,000.

Bonds hit .292 with 25 home runs and 116 RBIs last season as Pittsburgh won its second straight NL East title. In six years with the Pirates, he has hit .269 with 142 home runs and 457 RBIs.

Bonds made $2.3 million last year after losing his arbitration bid for $3.3 million. He made $850,000 in 1990 after losing at $1.6 million and then won the NL Most Valuable Player award.

This time, he asked for $5 million in arbitration and the Pirates offered $4 million, the most ever offered by a team. The settlement tops the $4.5 million deal agreed to Tuesday between Cecil Fielder and the Detroit Tigers.

Pair share Olds Classic lead at 140

LAKE WORTH, Fla. (AP) — Pat Bradley, riding the euphoria of her recent Hall of Fame induction, overcame blustery wind on Friday to shoot a 5-under 67 for a share of the lead with Beth Daniel in the Oldsmobile Classic.

Bradley, 40, with a two-day total of 137, made up four shots on the leader when Daniel posted a 71. Jane Crafter, with a 69, was the only other player to break 70.

Sweden's Helen Alfredsson, the 1990 British Open champion who is beginning her first full season on the LPGA tour, was at 7-under through 34 holes when play was suspended because of darkness at the Wycliffe Golf & Country Club.

Two strokes behind the leaders were Hall of Famer Nancy Lopez and Rosie Jones. Dawn Coe and Deb Richard were at 140. Richard shot 70, Jones 71, Lopez 72 and Coe 73.

Bradley shot a front-nine 32, matching the wind velocity, with the highlights being three birdies and an eagle.

"I made some no-brainers, a big one (a 30-foot putt) for eagle which jumped me past some people," said Bradley, whose 30 career wins, including six majors, led to her Jan. 18 induction into the Hall of Fame. "I didn't try to beat the wind, just survive it and play with it."

Playing in the same group, Bradley and Daniel exchanged the top spot on the leader board throughout the afternoon. Daniel, back after a self-imposed 4½-month layoff, had three birdies and 13 pars.

"Florida golf courses aren't made for northwesterly winds," said Daniel, 35, who is seeking her 28th tournament victory. "I'm pleased to be in the position I'm in."

Pebble Beach leader asks for special help

PEBBLE BEACH, Calif. (AP) — P.H. Horgan III may have received some help from on high in a round of 70 that lifted him into a share of the second-round lead Friday at the Pebble Beach National Pro-Am.

Immediately after making his first bogey of the tournament on the 10th hole at Spyglass Hill, Horgan grumbled to his amateur partner:

"Now I really need a birdie or two — right now."

Perhaps I'll have a word with The Man Upstairs," responded the amateur, William Swing, the Episcopal Archbishop of San Francisco.

Horgan birdied the next hole and went on to tie for the 36-hole lead with Bob Lohr at 136, eight under par.

Lohr moved up with a 5-under-par 67 at Pebble Beach, one of three Monterey Peninsula courses used for the first three rounds of this slow-moving, celebrity-laden event.

Horgan, a 30-year-old retread from the Ben Hogan Tour, said it took his foursome almost six hours to complete play in chilly, windy weather.

"Patience is probably the most important ingredient here," said Horgan, a member of the exclusive Newport Country Club in Rhode Island.

In addition to the very slow pace of play, Horgan cited "playing three different, very difficult courses; and playing with an amateur — I don't mean that in a negative way, but you're lining up his putts, too, so you're really playing two balls.

"For those three reasons, this is a very difficult tournament to play; a very difficult tournament to win."

But the lessons learned on the Ben Hogan Tour last year should serve him in good stead, Horgan said.

"After two years of struggle on the regular tour, Horgan a year ago went from this event to the Hogan tour and immediately won the first of his two tournaments on the minor league circuit. "The Hogan tour was very important for me," he said. "I learned how to win. Learning how to win anywhere is important."

Can he now win here, in one of the tour's most prestigious events?

He paused for a moment before responding, "Yeah, I think so."

Horgan, however, has his work cut out for him. Mark O'Meara, a three-time winner of this tournament, and veteran Lanny Wadkins moved within a stroke of the lead and have an advantage in the course rotation.

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Small but leftist. That's the Porsche lineup for the Rolex 24-hour sports car endurance race, beginning today at Daytona International Speedway.

The German prototypes have been dominating on the 3.56-mile circuit which includes an infield road course and three-quarters of the track's high-banked oval.

Porsche, which has only three 962Cs entered in this season-opener, has won 18 of 24 of these races, including last year's surprising win by the quintet of Hurley Haywood, Germans Frank Jelinski and John Winter, Frenchman Bob Wollek and Italian Henri Pescarolo.

"The key to all those wins is reliability," said Haywood, the only five-time winner of the Daytona event. "When Porsche used to enter six, seven eight cars here, you just knew two of three would finish. If you finish, you can win.

"There are fewer Porsches entered here now, but I still expect one or two to finish, so that means we have a chance to win. History has proven that the Porsche is a very reliable car, and anybody who counts them out in a long distance race is mistaken."

Last year's winning team has been broken up, however.

Haywood will go for No. 6 in a 962 entered by former LeMans winner Vern Schuppan of Australia and co-driven by Indy-car driver Scott Brayton and IMSA rookies Roland Ratzenberger of Austria and Eje Elgh of Sweden.

Joest Racing, which won last year and in 1980, has entered the other two 962s, with Winner joining Italian Massimo Sigala, fellow German Bernd Schneider and Oscar Larrauri of Argentina in one, and Hans Stuck of Germany co-driving the other with Jelinski and Italian Giampiero Moretti.

In fact, the German prototypes are an antiquated model, having been running in IMSA's Camel GT series since 1984.

It's the most successful model in the history of the American sports car series, having won 53 GTP races during the past eight years.

"It is still a very good car," said Stuck, seeking his first 24-hour victory here.

"It is fast enough and strong enough to win again. There are cars that are faster, but speed is not usually what wins such a long race."

in more than 30 percent of households in the United States and more than 40 percent in Japan, said a statement released Friday by Howard Lincoln, senior vice president of Nintendo of America.

"Neither Nintendo Co. Ltd., Nintendo of America Inc., Mr. H. Yamauchi, Mr. M. Arakawa or any other Nintendo executive is involved in the gambling business," he said. "We don't have any interest in racehorses, casinos, sports-betting parlors, card rooms, racetracks or other gambling activities. The implication that Nintendo or its executives are somehow mixed up with gambling is absurd."

from New York who cried when his 1977 Marquette team won the NCAA championship; Jack Ramsay, whose 864 career victories with four NBA teams ranks second in league history, and the late Phil Woolpert, who led San Francisco to NCAA championships in 1955 and 1956.

They join 179 individuals and four teams already in the Hall in Springfield, where basketball was invented.

Hawkins was tossed out of college during his freshman year at Iowa and banned by the NBA for seven years after being accused of introducing players to a man convicted of fixing games. Hawkins said the accusations were untrue, and the NBA lifted the ban in 1969 after settling his damage suit for more than $1 million.

Meantime, Hawkins toured with the Harlem Globetrotters and won most valuable player honors in the rival American Basketball Association's inaugural season after leaving Pittsburgh to the ABA title. He joined the Phoenix Suns as a 25-year-old rookie in a poll loss that sent Kareem Abdul-Jabbar to Milwaukee. During his seven years in the league, with Phoenix, the Los Angeles Lakers and Atlanta, Hawkins played in four NBA All-Star games and was a first-team All-NBA selection in 1970.

"When I settled my lawsuit, that was vindication enough for me," Hawkins said. "Through all those years, I knew I was innocent."

However, Hawkins, 48, said his induction should settle matters for any fans who still remember the gambling scandal.

Reacting to the news of his induction, McGuire credited his players and the family that "allowed me the freedom to pursue my mistress, basketball."

"I'd like to thank my players — the guys from the cracked sidewalks and the cities," McGuire said. "I couldn't recruit a player if he had grass growing in front of his home."

He said that Hawkins' election meant almost as much to him as his own.

"He's always been a cut above, both as a person and as a basketball player," McGuire said. "I'm close to Louie; I know Dry Docks (his nickname for Lanier, whose size 22 sneakers, bronzed, preceded him into the Hall of Fame), and Ramsay's book on defense was the Bible. But the guy I am happiest for is Connie. I think that he has never received the amount of applause he deserved."

U.S. takes lead behind Agassi win

KOHALA COAST, Hawaii (AP) — A hard-court and some hard serves gave Andre Agassi a straight-set victory over Alberto Mancini and the United States a 2-0 lead over Argentina in first-round Davis Cup play on Friday.

Agassi kept Mancini from breaking his service en route to a 6-4, 6-4, 6-4 victory.

In the day's first match, Pete Sampras extended a Davis Cup ghost with a 3-6, 6-4, 6-2, 6-4 defeat of Martin Jaite.

The Americans had a chance to clinch the best-of-five series as early as Saturday, when the doubles team of John McEnroe and Rick Leach faced Argentina's Javier Frana and Christian Miniussi.

Players battled wind gusting to 30 mph at the Mauna Lani Racquet Club on Hawaii Island. A power failure knocked out electricity to the club during the Sampras-Jaite match.

Agassi took advantage of Mancini's inexperience and his own ability on a hard surface, keeping the Argentine on the defensive with hard serves that Mancini hit long or wide.

Mancini admitted he had little confidence in his ability to handle Agassi's serve.

"The wind was bad for me. I hit with a topspin and that's why I was slicing all the returns," Mancini said. "Clay is my surface. I have much more confidence on that surface."

Agassi said he also took advantage of Mancini by forcing him to hit with his backhand.

"He relies more on his forehand, so I tried to pressure his backhand, figuring it would lead to some free points, and it did," Agassi said. "I like to play on the baseline, and the conditions were too tough for that. If you waited for the ball it would beat you because of the wind."

Agassi broke Mancini's service in the third game of the first set, and converted several unforced errors into a fifth-game break in the second.

Wheat farmers try to hold out for more

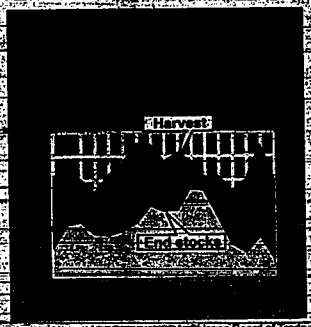

By Clark Miller
Ag Weekly writer

FILER — Hugo Meyer watched the soft white wheat market grow all fall and winter. In December, when prices at Magic Valley grain elevators were around $3.70 per bushel, he cashed out.

"We jumped the gun a little early," Meyer said.

He might have earned an extra 10 to 15 cents per bushel by waiting, but soft white wheat prices have mostly held steady since mid-December.

Since July, farmers have been guessing when the rallying wheat market would peak and trying to decide when they should sell. "It all depends on how much fortitude you have," said Jim Brennan of Curry Grain Co. in Twin Falls. "Farmers have done a good job. They haven't been overly eager to sell and have paced their sales out so we can get it moved."

Carry-over supply

Producers received good news when the USDA reported Jan. 13 that carry-over U.S. wheat stocks for 1991-92 may be down to about 390 million bushels, the lowest level since 1973-74. But the announcement didn't seem to influence the market.

"You can't rely on supply and demand anymore," said Rupert farmer Bill Hepworth. The market depends more on USDA export subsidy programs and credits issued by Congress than supply, he said.

"You look at the numbers right now, and the price is around $3.80," Hepworth said. "If the market relied on supply and demand, the price would be around $5 or $6."

Marketing decisions

Hepworth said he relies on several factors when making market decisions.

Story continued on page 8

Short-term outlook

"I usually base my decision on newsletters I subscribe to and my own personal experience," he said. "Sometimes I've hit the peak and sometimes I missed the peak and fell into the valley."

Hepworth is still holding onto some wheat but began selling in November at around $3.50 per bushel and sold more as prices went higher. Basically, "I was probably lucky this year," he said. "I have friends who sold at $2.80 and some who sold at $3," he said.

Twin Falls producer Ron Griff sold the last of his wheat Tuesday at $4 after selling part of his crop in mid-January. "It was up around the $4 level shortly after Christmas," he said. "Then a couple of weeks after that it dropped about 25 cents. We were getting a little edgy with the market. With storage and interest piling up, I sold."

Meyer nearly sold his wheat last summer right after harvest when the market hadn't even started its upward climb.

"But the price dropped 15 cents, so we decided to hold on," he said.

While he was waiting, wheat export programs to the disintegrating Soviet Union were announced, the USDA reported the 1991 crop was smaller than expected and prices took off.

Soft white wheat delivered to Portland topped the $4 per bushel mark in October and is now hovering around $4.55. Transportation costs reduce the Portland price by about 70 cents per bushel at Magic Valley elevators.

Price outlook

Soft white wheat prices should remain strong into spring, said Jack Gilleland, owner of Pacific Commodity Futures Inc. in Portland.

MARK KING/Magic Valley Ag Weekly

Farmer Hugo Meyer held his wheat until December.

"The optimism should carry out at least through the winter," Gilleland said.

Two other major soft white wheat-producing countries, Australia and Argentina, had poor crops but Canada and the European Economic Community both have surplus wheat stocks, he said.

Aggressive use of the USDA's Export Enhancement Program has helped keep U.S. wheat competitive on the world market and should maintain prices through April, Gilleland said.

Contracts for next fall's crop are already available for $3.35 to $3.45 per bushel, Brennan said. Depending on acres planted and weather, the price could be back up to current levels by next year, he said.

The 1991-92 winter wheat seedings are down 2 percent, according to a Jan. 10 report by USDA. Because wheat prices have remained strong, spring plantings are expected to be higher than normal and that may have a negative impact on prices.

Drought conditions in major wheat producing areas in 1992 could also keep supplies tight, he said.

Will Russian planes land in Twin Falls?

Mystery call prompts speculation valley spuds may fly to republics

By Clark Miller
Ag Weekly writer

TWIN FALLS — Ron Madsen, manager of the Twin Falls-Sun Valley Regional Airport, recently received a phone call from someone in the Idaho potato industry asking if the facility could handle a Russian aircraft about the size of a DC-8.

"I said 'Yes we could handle it,'" Madsen said. He couldn't identify who had called, though, and he hasn't heard any more about the possibility.

All kinds of deals to send Idaho potatoes to Russia and other republics of the former Soviet Union are in the works, but so far nothing has been resolved.

"Since the first part of December there have been a thousand rumors going around," said Mel Anderson, executive director of the Idaho Potato Commission.

Separate negotiations involving the USDA, the republics and various private organizations are underway, said Tom Cooper of the Federal-State Market News Service in Idaho Falls. "Right now we're just waiting to hear something concrete," Cooper said.

The Idaho Department of Agriculture is also involved in an effort involving USDA, said Kelly Olson, marketing and development administrator.

The USDA projects involve dehydrated potatoes. This is the first time a food aid project has involved the Soviet republics and it is taking USDA time to work out all the details, said Ted Sullivan, a spokesman for Rep. Richard Stallings, D-Idaho. "I can't give you a concrete time frame because USDA hasn't given us one yet," Sullivan said Thursday in a telephone interview from Washington, D.C.

'Right now we're just waiting to hear something concrete.'
— Tom Cooper, Federal-State Market

USDA would accept bids from processors for dehydrated potatoes for shipment, Sullivan said.

Private Idaho potato interests are also negotiating on a fresh potato shipment to the former Soviet republics, Cooper said. "A lot of work has been done on these," he said.

So far the hang-ups have been transportation and private interests making sure they will receive payments, Cooper said.

"Transporting fresh potatoes would require shipment by air because of perishability, he said.

Anderson said the Idaho Potato Commission is working on a relief package to hungry U.S. residents that will be announced Tuesday that includes fresh and processed potatoes.

IPC will receive donations of potatoes from processors and growers in the Magic Valley, but the amounts and donors' names won't be available until next week, he said.

St. Louis farmer tells how to cut costs

By Clark Miller
Ag Weekly writer

TWIN FALLS — Leland Eikermann went from being a millionaire farmer to bankruptcy during the '70s and '80s.

So the Bourbon, Mo., farmer started over, this time spurning new equipment, chemical fertilizers and pesticides, and concentrating on alternative farming methods he hopes are sustainable, natural and long-term.

Eikermann was in Twin Falls last Saturday, speaking to members of the Idaho Rural Council.

"It used to cost me $2,000 just to get out of bed in the morning," he said, of the days he farmed 3,000 acres, using input-intensive management practices. "At the end of the year, I didn't have enough to pay my bills. I made a million dollars in the '70s and in 1987 filed for Chapter 12."

Now he grows and markets organic produce, "range" chickens and farm-fresh eggs directly to St. Louis area consumers.

"I made a lot of money for the bank's John Deere, Cargill and ConAgra. But we didn't have any left for us," he said. "We changed our farm from a raw product give-away to producing and supplying food to consumers."

His message, he says, isn't that farmers should follow his plan, but that they should make changes that fit their operations, preserve soil and provide incomes. His farm is low on inputs, but is labor-intensive. He hires unemployed neighbors to hoe weeds and harvest produce. He works with food pantries to distribute food to hungry families and he has a booth at a St. Louis farmers' market every summer, he said.

He encouraged farmers to break away from conventional agricultural practices and market food directly to consumers.

Idaho lags behind in cutting EBDC use

By Clark Miller
Ag Weekly writer

POCATELLO — Northwest potato producers must show federal regulators they are voluntarily cutting back on EBDC fungicides or face losing them, according to the director of quality control for General Mills Inc.

The Environmental Protection Agency has been influenced by growers in some states who have promoted their chemical reduction efforts, said Lloyd Moberg, one of the speakers at the Idaho Potato School.

Growers in other states are ahead of Idaho when it comes to promoting voluntary reductions of EBDC fungicides and boasting about their integrated pest management strategies, Moberg said. "EPA is negotiating, looking at information from users," said Moberg.

The "ethylene bis dithio carbonate" (EBDC) fungicides are used to control potato blight and are also used as a treatment dust for seed piece decay. The group of fungicides were generally registered and marketed several years ago and are now being re-evaluated by EPA.

The agency is considering creating label restrictions for EBDC, state by state instead of nationally, giving preference to states EPA believes are making efforts to voluntarily reduce the use of pesticides, Moberg said.

Wisconsin potato producers have done the best job of promoting themselves, he said.

"Northwest potato growers are in last place for EBDC approval," Moberg said. "The primary reason is growers in other parts of the country have submitted integrated pest management plans showing EPA how they're being responsible."

The status of EBDC is still uncertain, Moberg said, but EPA should release its findings about label restrictions sometime this month. A year ago, he said, it looked doubtful it would be certified for use at all, but growers have pressured officials by showing they have a need for the product.

EBDC manufacturers elected not to recertify some chemicals for potatoes because of the fees charged by EPA. But EPA and USDA are working to make sure pesticides that growers need to maintain crop quality don't lose certification because the maker finds it too expensive, he said.

NCA report: Bull prices slide as '92 season starts

By Ag Weekly and
Knight-Ridder Financial News

SAN DIEGO – Cash prices paid for cattle bulls have collapsed $300 to $400 in the last 45 days, which could be a sign that the expansion phase in the cattle market is slowing.

"The bull market got into a fervor pitch last spring and summer, which is a classic sign that the bull market (in live cattle) had ended," said Bob Price, analyst with Cargill Investor Services, at the National Cattlemens Association annual meeting.

His analysis contradicts statements made last week by Dick Spader of the American Angus Association, who predicted that purebred bull sales would continue to strengthen in 1992.

1991 brought the largest year-to-year expansion seen in the U.S. cattle industry since 1975, Price said.

He added that he was predicting the total U.S. cattle herd to be up 2.5 percent from last year in the Feb. 7 USDA cattle inventory report.

Even though expansion is slowing, turning the corner on the larger supplies resulting from expansion is "like turning an aircraft carrier around by hand," Price said.

The Houston sale is akin to a select sale because only top quality seedstock are offered.

Although the early estimates are that prices will decline about $200, don't be surprised if the actual market is down $300 to $400 said Dick Darley, owner of Rancho Arboleda, a seedstock company headquartered in San Diego with ranches in California and Texas.

The seedstock market typically is very stable.

For example, a 10 percent decline in feeder cattle prices usually will only lead to a 5 percent slide in bull prices, Darley said. However, bull prices have recently crumbled 20 to 30 percent.

Lower feeder cattle prices have taken a heavy toll on the bull market, as have concerns about the U.S. economy and longer term doubts about the futures of the cattle business, Darley said.

Seedstock buyers have also started to use bulls an extra year and are using them to covet more cows in an attempt to recoup money lost due to lower feeder cattle prices.

The latest break in prices has pushed some operators out of business, and Darley hopes that herd expansion has ended because a long run of lower prices could eliminate more seedstock operators and slow advances in herd quality.

Cattlemen announce carcass data collection service

Knight-Ridder Financial News

SAN DIEGO – The National Cattlemen's Association has taken long-awaited action on moving toward a value-based cattle marketing system by initiating a carcass data collection service.

This new program was introduced Sunday at the annual NCA convention, with the goal of gathering the first carcass data by Mar. 1, said John Stowell, manager, cattlemen's carcass data service.

NCA has long felt that cattle producers were not receiving enough feedback from the processing end of the business to make the proper business decisions that would eliminate undesirable carcass characteristics.

The long-range goal of the program is to gather information on cattle carcasses that can help improve the competitive position of beef by improving product quality, consistency and reducing waste fat.

The program will be funded by producers at a cost of 5 dlrs per head, with discounts available for large head count guarantees, NCA said.

Although the $5 price tag will undoubtably seem high to many producers, especially in a year of negative returns, NCA said the value difference between carcasses grading U.S. standard and U.S. prime is as high as $206 per head.

Considering the producer could be losing $200 per head by marketing cattle with inferior carcass characteristics, "I think $5 a head is a good investment," Stowell said.

In addition to the cost hurdle the carcass data program will have to overcome lingering producer concerns about any move toward pricing cattle after they've been slaughtered and by reluctance from breeder groups who would not want to be identified as producing an "undesirable carcass trait."

Even if the program is a success, it will take several years for any results to be seen, admits Stowell.

The first-year goal of the program is to gather carcass data on 20,000 head of cattle, and the second-year goal is to process another 50,000 head, Stowell said.

However, given annual commercial cattle slaughter of about 23 million head, it will take at least 3 years to gather enough data to assemble a meaningful sampling, he said.

Even then, it would take another 5 to 7 years for the information to result in genetic changes in the industry, he said.

Although it would appear an uphill battle, NCA is convinced that these changes must be made to keep beef competitive with other meat sources.

Vets say dairies should drug test on farm

By Michael Hofferber
Ag Weekly correspondent

SUN VALLEY – In response to a new ordinance requiring residue screening on every tanker load of pasteurized milk, some veterinarians are encouraging client dairies to do their own on-farm drug testing.

"I want my dairymen to have a test kit on the farm to test individual cows," Dr. Paul Niehaus of Wendell told members of the Idaho Veterinary Medical Association (IVMA) during a special seminar on residue testing at Elkhorn Resort last weekend.

"With the cows I treat, no matter what I've treated them with, I want them tested before their milk goes back on the tank," Neihaus said.

As of Jan. 1, the Food and Drug Administration requires every load of Grade A milk to be screened for residues. The testing occurs before processing and milk found to have traces of drugs such as chlortetracycline, sulfadiazine or neomycin above minimum tolerance levels will be dumped.

After a six-month grace period ending July 1, dairies with violations could also have their Grade A permits revoked.

To avoid these consequences, Neihaus advised veterinarians to keep the cows they are treating segregated from the rest of the herd. Milk from the treated cows should be kept out of production until drug residues are negative, or within FDA tolerance levels.

Neihaus introduced a half-dozen different test kits that are available for on-farm use, but cautioned that none are totally reliable.

"There are false positives and false negatives," he pointed out. "Drug residue testing is not an exact science yet."

Drug residues were the main topic of discussions and workshops for large-animal veterinarians at the IVMA meeting, which attracted nearly one-fourth of the state's 350 licensed veterinarians. Along with requiring milk residue screening, the new state and federal regulation threaten to limit the animal doctors' use of certain drugs.

Veterinarians working with sick dairy cattle must be careful to prescribe only those drugs approved by the FDA for use on food-producing animals, said Dr. Greg Ledbetter, a Jerome veterinarian and dairyman.

"There's no place in veterinary medicine for compounding (mixing drugs) any more, at least in the dairy industry," he said.

Ledbetter also warned vets to be careful in prescribing extra-label use drugs (ELUDs), or drugs used in a way not specified on their labels.

"Anyone causing illegal drug residues as a result of ELUD may be subject to regulatory action," Ledbetter said.

The veterinarian/dairyman encouraged his medical colleagues working with dairies to "get involved with their clients' herd health programs and to get serious about residue avoidance.

"We can, without a doubt, reduce the dependence on drugs through good preventative herd health programs," he said.

Whether or not drug residues are truly a threat to the food supply, veterinarians must take the issue seriously, said Dr. Bob Hillman, Idaho's State Veterinarian.

"Among consumers, perception equals reality," he said. "Whether there's a real problem or a perceived problem, for us – practically – it's a real problem."

Co-ops seek orders changes

Ag Weekly

TWIN FALLS – Darigold Farms has requested a hearing before USDA to consider the cooperative's proposal that multiple component pricing provisions be incorporated in the Pacific Northwest Federal milk order.

In addition, Darigold and Western Dairymen Cooperative, Inc. (WDCI) have proposed a similar pricing plan for the Southwest Idaho-Eastern Oregon milk order.

The multiple component pricing plan proposed for the Pacific Northwest order would price milk on the basis of its volume and the butterfat and nonfat milk solids contained in the milk, while the proposed pricing plan for the Southwest Idaho-Eastern Oregon order would price milk on the basis of its volume and its butterfat and protein content.

The proposals for both orders are patterned after the provisions of the Middle Atlantic order, which prices nonfat milk solids and includes an interim Class III-A; and the Great Basin order, which uses protein as a pricing constituent. Interested parties may obtain copies of the entire proposals from the proponents at: Darigold Farms, P.O. Box 79007, Seattle, WA 98119, Telephone 206-286-6700.

The proposed amendments have not yet been approved for inclusion in a notice of hearing. Before deciding whether a hearing should be held, the USDA is providing interested parties an opportunity to submit additional proposals.

Prices and consolidation are linked, senator says

By Clark Miller
Ag Weekly writer

TWIN FALLS — Producers have watched lamb prices fall as lamb packing firms have consolidated.

And falling prices have sharply cut the number of lambs produced in Idaho.

Those developments are more than coincidence, state Sen. Laird Noh, a Twin Falls County lamb producers and president of the Rocky Mountain Sheep Marketing Association, told Idaho Rural Council members in Twin Falls last week for the group's annual meeting.

In 1973, the year the Rocky Mountain grower-controlled marketing association began, there were 125,000 lambs in Idaho and packing plants scattered across the western U.S.

Now, 50,000-60,000 Idaho lambs are slaughtered each year by only two dominant firms, Noh said.

"Suddenly we were left with Superior Packing as the only major operator on the West Coast and ConAgra in Denver," he said.

ConAgra stepped up its holdings in the lamb-slaughtering business three years ago after buying out Monfort, Swift and Armour and consolidating its packing operations in Denver. Superior has plants in Dixon, Calif., and Ellensburg, Wash.

"We're limited to Superior and ConAgra, that's about it," Noh said. "Even with competition, you have a big freight disadvantage."

According to the American Sheep Industry Association, ConAgra slaughters 33 percent of the lambs in the United States. Superior has 16 percent of the market.

Shortly after ConAgra was consolidating, in 1990 and 1991, lamb prices dropped dramatically. Prices have dropped more than 90 cents per pound, to around 50 cents, since 1989. Packers say increased supply is responsible for the decline, but retail prices have not fallen accordingly, Noh said.

Concentration of the beef packing industry has also grown, although there the price swing hasn't been as drastic as in lamb. Three firms, IBP, Excel (Cargill) and ConAgra now slaughter 80 percent of all fed cattle in the United States. In 1977, four firms slaughtered 25 percent of all fed cattle.

Gilles Stockton, a sheep and cattle rancher from Grassrange, Mont., blames the packers for price gouging and said the entire meat packing industry has become a monopoly.

Stockton is a member of the Western Organization of Resource Councils, a regional association of grassroots organizations with over 4,000 members in Wyoming, Colorado, Montana, North Dakota and South Dakota. Since 1989, WORC has been a leading organization in the fight to break up the meat packing concentration.

"Unchecked, monopoly packers will destroy the industry by becoming inefficient and uncompetitive," Stockton said during the Idaho Rural Council meeting.

Stockton said packers are controlling prices and producers are the group left out of the marketing process.

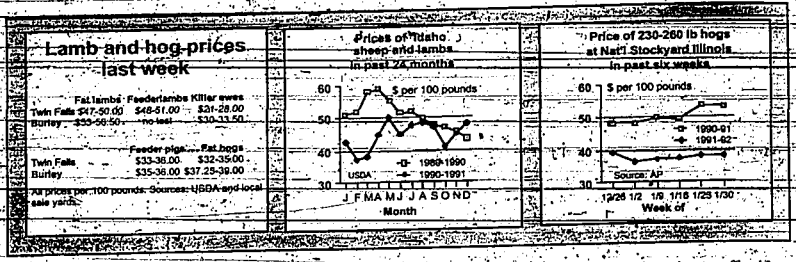

"Packers find it easier to offer lower prices to producers than fight wholesalers and retailers," he said.

After prompting from producer associations, including WORC, the anti-trust division of the U.S. Department of Justice has started investigating the meat packing industry.

Congressmen from cattle and sheep producing states are also pushing for investigation of the packing industry to determine why declines in prices paid to producers don't match changes in retail prices.

Noh said a recent improvement in lamb prices might be considered a sign the investigation is having some impact.

"At least it gives our industry a little breathing room," Noh said. "Companies try to make things a little better."

Payments to farmers fall as environmental cost-shares rise

BOISE — The USDA issued checks totaling over $186 million to farmers, ranchers and other Idahoans in 1991, according to the year-end report of the USDA's Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service.

"That figure represents the total of every check written last year, including payments for wheat and feed grain set-aside programs, commodity loans, wool incentives, dairy termination contracts, oil seed markings, conservation reserves, cost-shared conservation practices, and forestry incentives," explained Trent L. Clark, State Executive Director of the ASCS in Idaho.

Comparing these figures to past USDA payments in Idaho, direct price and income supports for agriculture have dropped significantly. Wheat and feed grain payments in 1991 were less than half what they were in 1987 and the loans on those same commodities have fallen to a tenth of their previous levels.

"In fact, total USDA-ASCS expenditures in Idaho are down more than 60 percent from 1987," said Clark, "and that during a time in which overall federal spending increased over 50 percent."

"At the same time, or order to qualify for federal assistance, farmers have been required to make ever larger investments in erosion control, water quality protections, wildlife habitat and other conservation practices."

The one area of federal ASCS spending that has not declined is payments made for environmental protection purposes.

Conservation cost-sharing has increased by 21 percent over 1987 levels, now accounting for over one out of every five dollars spent by the Agency in Idaho.

"This may signal a change in the emphasis of federal farm support programs," Clark said.

"Government dollars are going less to support farm incomes, and more to reimburse farmers for the added production costs caused by increasing environmental regulation of agriculture."

Blaine County, $1,386,336;
Camas County, $971,349;
Cassia County, $14,749,849;
Filmore County, $2,921,929;
Gooding County, $1,770,284;
Jerome County, $3,011,325;
Lincoln County, $1,816,906;
Minidoka County, $4,843,411;
Twin Falls County, $5,079,595.

Alpacas could be alternatives

CORVALLIS, Ore. (AP) — Alpacas can fetch prices ranging from $20,000 to $65,000.

Alpacas, like their South American cousins, llamas, also are prized as show animals or pets.

"At the same time, they are still cute, cuddly and fuzzy — a great attraction for some people," Smith said.

The university is expanding its research on alpacas to accommodate ranchers seeking alternatives to sheep, he said.

paca ranching could become a profitable alternative to raising sheep in Oregon, according to Oregon State University veterinarians.

"They have a premium quality fiber that can bring $3 to $4 an ounce, compared to 50 cents a pound for sheep wool," said Brad Smith, a veterinary medicine professor.

Debate grows over subsidized exports

WASHINGTON — The nation's dwindling wheat stocks are starting to drive up food prices, and that could spark a political fight over subsidized grain sales to other countries.

Consumer activists say that USDA subsidies allow foreign customers to buy U.S. wheat more cheaply than can domestic millers. And as the subsidized sales continue, wheat stocks shrink and flour prices inch up.

The consumer advocates contend the taxpayer ends up paying twice: for more expensive food as well as for the costs of the export subsidies, which are expected to reach $1.2 billion this year.

Under the Export Enhancement Program, or EEP, international grain traders are awarded bonuses that allow them to sell U.S. grain at a more competitive price in the world market.

Those subsidized sales, which have been controversial since they began in 1985, could again be at the center of a political tussle this year. The Agriculture Department's decision in November to begin paying grain traders cash — rather than surplus commodities — during a time of short supplies and rising food prices could add fuel to the fire.

Farmers, who benefit from the rising wheat prices, say it's the bakers and millers who are profiteering from the situation because the value of the wheat in a loaf of bread is less than a dime.

According to the Agriculture Department's most recent forecast, there will be 390 million bushels of wheat remaining in the nation's bins when the next crop year begins June 1.

And farmers have planted 2 percent less land to winter wheat for harvest in 1992 — even more tenuous, analysts say.

A USDA official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the department plans to continue the subsidized wheat sales but is keeping a close watch on the markets.

"We don't feel we're in a position where we have to purposely scale back the EEP," the official said.

Cutting off EEP sales could send the wrong signal to the European Community, which also subsidizes its farm exports, the official noted, while a failure to curtail them has the potential of angering consumers.

"You're damned if you do and damned if you don't," the official said.

Consumer activists say the sales should be called off now.

"They're giving it away cheaper than it costs the American consumers and there's no reason to do it," says Rod Leonard, executive director of the Community Nutrition Institute.

"It's left the American consumer vulnerable to large increases in the price of bread and grain products."

Just as cash wheat prices have risen from $2.71 a bushel a year ago to $4.52 last week, wholesale flour prices have jumped from $7.25 per 100 pounds in January 1991 to $11.30 in late January 1992.

"The price increases have been coming almost daily," Leonard said.

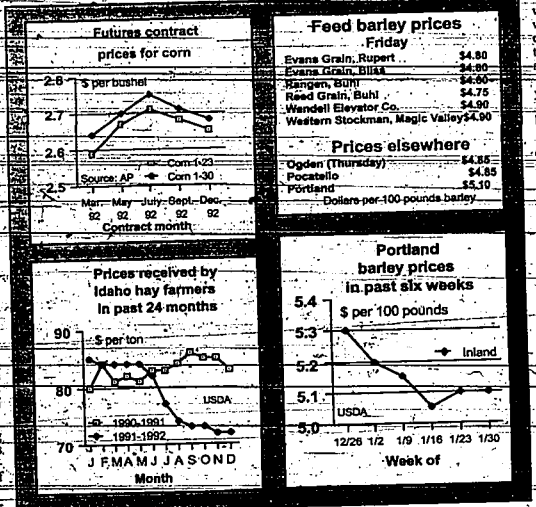

The higher flour prices, he said, will mean higher prices for bread, pasta and baked goods.

It also means less flour in USDA stocks for the school lunch program and other institutional uses.

That could drive up the costs for school lunch programs, Leonard said.

The higher wheat prices and shorter supplies will also put more pressure on corn and feed grain stocks — the raw material for meat, poultry, milk and eggs — and those foods could ultimately cost more as well, he said.

Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., chairman of the House Agriculture subcommittee on wheat and feed grains, will look into the need to continue the subsidized exports during a hearing Thursday on the EEP.

World poultry production rises

WASHINGTON (AP) — World poultry meat production for 1991 is expected to show an increase of 4.1 percent over 1990, and similar growth is anticipated in 1992, says the Agriculture Department.

Mexico, with a growth rate of 20 percent in 1991, is the most rapidly expanding poultry meat producer in the world, the department said in its January report on the world poultry situation.

The United States is estimated to have had another record-setting year in terms of broiler exports, the report said.

"Although sales from the United States to the former Soviet Union were down in 1991, sales to markets in the Far East continued to be robust, allowing the United States to maintain its position as the world's number one exporter of broiler meat.

Brazil was the only broiler exporter experiencing a decline in export volume. "The overvalued Brazilian currency has caused Brazil to lose market share in some overseas destinations. Additionally, Brazilian exporters claim intense competition between the United States and European Community has contributed to Brazil's deteriorating market share in some overseas markets," the report said.

ICA: Landmark jeopardizes property rights

BOISE (AP) – The Idaho Cattle Association has criticized the National Parks Service's method of selecting natural landmarks as a threat to private property rights and a means to intimidate landowners.

The National Natural Landmark program was started in 1961 to preserve "nationally significant" natural areas.

Of the 587 sites, the Cattle Association said half include private lands and one-third are entirely on private property.

Betty Munis, the association's executive vice president, said the sites are often identified through studies by the Parks Service or others without the knowledge of landowners.

She said the cattle group fears a required annual report to Congress on damaged or threatened landmark sites could lead to condemnation of private property.

"We question the integrity of the NNL program and believe that it has been used to feed an insatiable appetite of the National Park Service on a diet of private, state and other federal lands," Munis said.

She said proposed new rules to correct the problem and nine regional hearings followed an investigation by the inspector general of the Department of Interior had found more than 2,800 cases in which the property rights of private landowners were infringed upon because the Park Service had not followed the designation process.

Although a moratorium was place on the program in 1989, Munis said cattlemen contend the Park Service is still not listening.

"While the proposed regulations appear to be an attempt to repent and correct past sins of the National Park Service committed against unknowing landowners in nominating and designating landmarks, we believe there is a dire need for yet additional cleansing," Munis said.

Midwest crop floods Idaho as farmers hold tight

By Clark Miller
Ag Weekly writer

TWIN FALLS – Magic Valley bean packagers are looking to North Dakota for cheap beans while growers in southern Idaho hold out for better prices.

"It's just a matter of economics," said Carter Wilson, a Twin Falls bean broker.

Even adding transportation costs, companies sacking 1-pound to 2-pound packages can bring in North Dakota beans for less than Idaho beans would cost, Wilson said.

North Dakota beans are produced on dryland, making them cheaper to grow than irrigated Idaho beans. North Dakota beans also don't keep as long in storage as Idaho beans and farmers there can't wait as long to sell.

"These packagers have to have beans and local farmers aren't selling," said Jim Brennan of Curry Bean Co. in Filer. "Idaho farmers can't afford to sell and the packagers have to furnish a product to their end customer."

Brennan said most packagers in southern Idaho who are sacking beans in 1- and 2-pound bags are using North Dakota beans.

"Growers in North Dakota are ready sellers and have lower prices," Wilson said. "This doesn't happen very often, but this is an unusual year."

'If it stays the way it is now, nobody will be planting beans.'
— Shirrel Sylvester, Twin Falls bean producer

Growers in Idaho aren't pleased to see out-of-state beans competing with their product. They are also concerned that lesser quality beans shipped from Idaho will harm the reputation of Idaho beans.

The savings from bringing North Dakota beans into Idaho isn't enough to warrant the out-of-state imports, said Twin Falls bean producer Shirrel Sylvester.

"The reason that we come up with is they're trying to depress price," he said.

Sylvester said he is concerned packagers are using North Dakota beans to drive down the price of Idaho beans. Pinto prices in the Magic Valley this week are up to $13 per hundredweight from the $12 and $11 range of the past few weeks, but still not enough to generate grower interest, he said.

"It's one of these economic factors," said Harold West, Idaho Bean Commission manager.

"This low price situation is terrible. The grower knows he needs $16-$17 to break even and he's reluctant to sell at these kind of prices."

Buyers will have to increase the price sometime before spring if they expect Magic Valley farmers to plant beans, Sylvester said.

"If it stays the way it is now, nobody will be planting beans," Sylvester said.

Plugged-up Portland may dampen prices for a while

By Clark Miller

EEP – page 11

TWIN FALLS – Farmers hoping to sell wheat through the Portland terminal will have to wait until a backlog of stored grain can be moved.

River barge and rail traffic into Portland has been put on hold until grain buyers can make room for more wheat, said Jim Brennan of Curry Grain Storage in Twin Falls.

"Portland has been plugged for the past two weeks," he said. "They don't have room for wheat farmers in the Northwest want to sell."

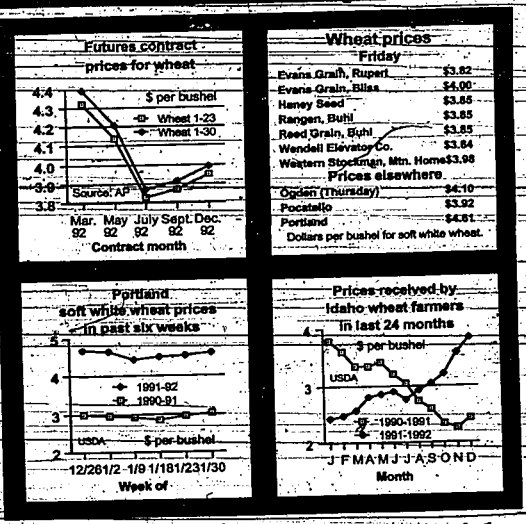

Grain broker Jack Gilleland, owner of Pacific Commodity Futures Inc. in Portland, said it could be weeks before there will be room for more soft white wheat.

"There's congestion here," Gilleland said in a telephone interview Wednesday. "A lot of it is other classes of wheat that have been brought in from Montana, the Dakotas and Nebraska. Most of it is hard red wheat brought in for exports that didn't materialize."

The congestion has hurt the price of Northwest wheat because Portland companies don't have room to buy.

"The market is sort of waiting and watching," Gilleland said. Right now, prices for March shipment are higher than February prices because of the supply overflow in Portland, he said.

There is hope a deal with the Soviet republics will ease some of the pressure this month. Gilleland said the United States will be offering the republics credit to purchase U.S. grain beginning in February. But it will be another week before grain exporters know how much wheat will be purchased by the Soviet republics, he said.

Knight-Ridder Financial News

RENO, Nev. – Wheat farmers at the National Association of Wheat Growers annual convention are bullish, and most don't have any intention of forward contracting portions of their new-crop 1992 wheat until at least March and maybe later, they said Thursday.

Many believe wheat prices could receive further powerful boosts if extremely cold weather kills part of the crop or if a lack of rain and windy weather this spring combine to wreak havoc on wheat fields.

The tightest ending stocks since the early 1970s and an unexpectedly low USDA winter wheat seedings report earlier this month will magnify weather problems, they said.

However, farmers are discussing wheat prices and when to begin forward contracting new-crop wheat. Both CBT and KCBT July Thursday closed within 15 cents per bushel of $4. Cash grain buyers generally are willing now to pay from $3.60 to $3.80 to farmers willing to promise harvest shipment of winter wheat, farmers said.

If a combination of futures prices and basis levels lift new-crop cash wheat to $4 many farmers may begin to sell for harvest shipment.

Dan Looten, a wheat farmer near Amarillo, Texas, said many farmers sold all of their 1991 crop before the nearby shipment price reached $4 in December.

"It's been a long time since most farmers have seen $4 wheat, and it would be pretty hard not to sell," he said.

But fellow Texan W.R. Moore, who farms in north-central Texas, said if cash new-crop wheat hit 4.00 dlrs, farmers might revise their personal target price higher.

"We've had people all over my county say they were going to contract new-crop wheat at 3.50 dlrs, and now it's at 3.70 and they haven't contracted," he said.

Many farmers have painful memories of selling wheat last year at harvest or shortly thereafter for under $3 per bushel and then watching nearby wheat futures explode to over 4 in Dec.

In 1991, up to 80 percent of all winter wheat was sold by farmers by Oct. 1, many industry observers say.

The year before, many farmers did not sell their new-crop wheat at harvest and then watched prices decline into winter, farmers here at the convention said. Many were forced to sell at those low prices to meet financial obligations.

'Soviet' credits take effect today

Knight-Ridder Financial News

WASHINGTON – Wheat remains the No. 1 import priority of the Commonwealth of Independent States, a U.S. Feed Grain Council representative just back from the CIS said Monday.

Wes Robinson, manager of international operations for USFGC, said that CIS buyers also made clear they would need additional help paying for freight charges or much of the U.S. credit guarantees now scheduled to be released could go unused.

Although Russian officials were "fuzzy" on just how much grain they would need to import to meet domestic demand, Ukraine officials said they needed to import at least 6 million metric tons – split fairly evenly between food and feed grain – by the start of July, he said.

Actual Ukrainian demand could be as much as 5 million metric tons higher, Robinson said, if Ukraine continues to be an exporter of animal products to the other former Soviet republics.

On Saturday, the United States is scheduled to release the first $200 million of $650 million in new export credit guarantees for the CIS.

Another $200 million is set for release Mar. 1, and the final $250 million is to follow on April 1.

Chicago Tribune

CHICAGO – Soaring prices triggered the government Tuesday to stop paying farmers for storing wheat under the so-called farmer-owned reserve program.

However, the move will free only a relatively small amount of grain for the tightest wheat market in 18 years. As of Jan. 21, only 113.8 million bushels remained in the reserve, according to the Agriculture Department.

On the Chicago Board of Trade, the nearby March wheat futures contract eased 1¾ cents to close at $4.37¾ a bushel. The July contract, reflecting prices for the crop to be harvested this summer, gained 2¼ cents to settle at $3.88.

Despite the loss of storage fees, farmers may hang onto the wheat in expectation of still higher prices. USDA has estimated that only 414 million bushels will remain in storage when the marketing year ends May 31.

Last year was the first time since 1985 that wheat was allowed into the farmer-owned reserve. Under the program, wheat harvested in 1990 could be shifted into the reserve after it had been under a normal government loan program — $1.96 a bushel — for nine months.

Spuds make effort to fill trade gap with Japanese

By Marlene Fritz
For The Associated Press

BOISE – Their interest in U.S. cars has yet to get in gear, but the Japanese appetite for American french-fried potatoes has been in overdrive for a decade.

According to University of Idaho research assistant Yanqing Gao, exports of frozen potato products to Japan increased 570 percent between 1978 and 1990, and she projects another 30 percent increase by the year 2000.

In 1990, three out of every five pounds of U.S. exports of frozen potato products went to Japan, Gao says – a value of $81.5 million for 2.48 billion poufds of frozen french fries, bakers and patties.

U.S. fresh-pack potatoes aren't allowed into Japan, a situation Gao attributes to a combination of quarantine regulations and trade protectionism.

While 28 percent of the frozen potato products the Japanese imported in 1978 came from the United States, 10 years later that number was 72 percent and climbing.

"From the figures we have, it looks like they just can't help it," says Gao, a native of Beijing, China. "Japan's economy has been booming and it's highly industrialized and Westernized," she says. "There are a lot of women in the labor force and the general pace of life is really very rapid."

That means Japan has "all the characteristics that can boost demand" for convenience foods.

Gao says Japanese young people in particular have heated up demand for french fries.

"They're so adaptive to the Western lifestyle, they watch TV a lot, they want to try new things – and once they try them, they like them."

She says the rate of growth for the Japanese market probably has peaked. Demand will continue to increase, but at slower speeds, she predicts. "Those companies that are already there are going to do well, but for new exporters, it will be a tough market to get into."

Mel Anderson, executive director of the Idaho Potato Commission, agrees that the growth in the Japanese market has leveled off. But he says there's still stretching room for frozen baked potatoes and for a branded commodity, such as an Idaho-trademarked potato. "Unaided awareness of the Idaho potato over there is something above 90 percent," Anderson says.

So far, six years of effort have not convinced the Japanese to permit the "Idaho" trademark, but if and when they do, Anderson thinks "Idaho potatoes can do a pretty good job in there."

Russet Burbank seen declining

POCATELLO (AP) — The russet Burbank no longer will be the potato of choice for many growers by the year 2005, a University of Idaho researcher predicts.

"I believe the reality 15 years from now is that the majority of producers now growing russet Burbanks will be raising a different variety," Stephen Love told farmers attending last week's Idaho Potato School at Idaho State University.

"It may be a variety genetically derived from the russet Burbank but it will still be distinct."

Love, potato variety specialist at the Aberdeen Agricultural Research Station, said production of the russet Burbank has tapered off slightly in the past seven years. In 1985, 96 percent of the acreage produced was russet Burbanks. In 1990 the acreage dropped to 92 percent and in 1991 it was 90 percent.

"We are starting to see more of an influx of other varieties on the market, especially chippers," he said.

Other varieties gaining in popularity, Love added, are long whites, early russets, reds and specialty varieties such as spuds in unusual colors like purple and bright yellow.

"Speciality varieties can be quite profitable if you can break into the market," Love said. "I know one guy in California who is growing 90 acres of yellow potatoes and received $34 a hundredweight last year for them."

Raising another variety of potato can complement a russet Burbank production.

"Often, growing a second market type is as good as growing another crop because you are able to use the same equipment as for the first operation," Love said.

There are disadvantages.

"There are no established buyers for potatoes other than russets. You have to go out and contact them yourself," he said. Also, there is the lack of established shipping routes and industry-supported advertising.

"The major reason why there is such a strong industry in the Northwest, particularly Idaho, is this area has the greatest output in advertising effort," he said. "If we change market types, it won't be successful if advertising doesn't go along."

Wireworms gain ground after absence

University of Idaho

BOISE – An ugly bug that can ruin the looks of the best Idaho russet may be making a comeback after a 20-year snooze.

Jim Zalewski, senior manager of agricultural research at Ore-Ida in Ontario, Ore., said he rarely saw potatoes with wireworms five years ago.

"Now, it's something you see sporadically," Zalewski said. "It doesn't do much harm, but in the long term growers could have problems without proper pesticide usage."

The orange, hard-bodied bug grows up to 1 inch long and nibbles seedling peas, corn and beans to death. With spuds, growers and processors are concerned mostly about the cosmetic damage a hungry wireworm can do. "In the old days, we probably ate the infested potatoes anyway," said Craig Baird, an entomologist at the University of Idaho Research and Extension Center.

Trustee: Chapter 12 works for farmers

By Clark Miller
Ag Weekly writer

TWIN FALLS – Chapter 12 bankruptcy has been a successful program for Magic Valley farmers, according to Forrest Hymas of Jerome, the federally appointed trustee who oversees Chapter 12 cases in the valley.

About 85 percent of all Magic Valley farmers filing for Chapter 12 have restructured their debt and have retained their operations, Hymas said last week during an address at the annual meeting of the Idaho Rural Council in Twin Falls.

"In general, I've been very impressed with the way it's worked," he said.

Chapter 12 was created in 1986 by the federal court with the purpose of keeping family farmers on the farm.

It allows farmers to come up with either a three- or five-year plan of spreading out debt to a point where the operation's cash flow can meet expenses.

Since the program started, 84 cases have been filed by Magic Valley farmers, Hymas said.

Of those, 49 have been confirmed by the U.S. Bankruptcy Court, but Hymas said others have been settled between farmers and creditors before going to court. Other cases opted for Chapter 7 after filing for Chapter 12 protection.

As a trustee, Hymas works with both farmers and creditors, evaluating unpaid claims and the financial status of the farmer. The two sides are brought together and urged to work out a plan they can settle in court or have the court decide unsettled issues.

In 1990, $904,000 were paid back to unsecured creditors from Chapter 12 cases in Idaho, and more than $5 million were returned to secured creditors.

"A lot of that would never have been paid back without chapter 12," Hymas said.

Chapter 12 is scheduled for termination Oct. 31, 1993, but could be renewed by Congress, Hymas said. It was originally planned as a short-term program to ease the financial crunch facing farmers in the early 1980s.

"No one knows for sure where Chapter 12 is going," Hymas said. A similar bankruptcy option, tentatively titled Chapter 10, could be instated, or Chapter 12 could be continued.

"Congress will probably respond by continuing Chapter 12," he said. "Based on what congressmen hear from constituents, they might bump it up to 1995."

How to read your banker's mind

By Clark Miller
Ag Weekly writer

TWIN FALLS – Lawyer Bill Thomas claims farmers can tell when their bankers aren't telling them something. He's even developed his own list of "Twenty Ways to Read Your Banker."

"There are ways you can tell when your relationship isn't what you think it is," he said during a speech last week at the Idaho Rural Council's annual meeting in Twin Falls.

From 1978 to 1990, Thomas worked for theBanks. He was senior counsel for First Interstate Bank of Washington and then general counsel for West One Bank of Idaho.

Then he switched sides, going into private practice and dealing with borrowers instead of lenders. His firm, Brady, Lema, Thomas Chartered, has offices in Boise and Twin Falls.

Thomas defended local bankers working from branch offices as "good folks" with intentions of helping clients. But the decision-making process has changed, and more authority is being asserted by the administration tier of bank officials at corporate headquarters, he said.

"Very few people really understand the banking process at the gut level," Thomas said. "Most of the time you're dealing with people who have very little authority."

The officials in the main office don't have to look you in the eye, Thomas said.

But local bankers still know what those officials are deciding and borrowers can look for obvious and subtle clues that will let them know if their banking relationship is about to change for the worse.

Some of Thomas's tips on reading bankers include:

– Your local branch banker begins talking about decisions made by "people in Boise" or "the loan committee."

– You are introduced to a new banker "from administration" who just wants to see your operation.

– Your local banker stops giving you information orally and starts putting everything in writing.

– New documents waive your rights to a jury trial, require you to give 20 days notice if you think you have a claim against the bank, or they require you to bring any lawsuit to Ada County.

– Your banker starts talking about "liquidation values."

If borrowers begin noticing some of these changes or others, Thomas said it's time to consider looking for help.

"When your banker starts backtracking on promises, seek legal help or an opinion from an accountant, bodline or neighbor," he said.

Rural Council seeks counseling funds

BOISE – The Idaho Rural Council and Mediation Associates have applied for grants to assist distressed farm families.

Pam Baldwin, IRC, said that creating a program and training advocates to assist farmers with credit and family problems were the primary objectives of the requests.

Mediation Associates work with families in conflict. Tim Gleason of Mediation Associates noted that some farm families need assistance in setting up healthy family communications and structures for resolving day to day conflicts.

Farmers are self reliant by nature and many have a difficult time sharing feelings with anyone during hard times, he said. The problems are often more intense when several generations are involved in the family business.

Interested parties may write, giving the number of family members involved, to Mediation Associates, 405 South 8th Street, Boise, ID 83702.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Foreign-owned grain companies are collecting hundreds of millions of dollars in subsidies from the Agriculture Department to sell U.S. wheat and other farm products overseas.

The subsidies were made under the Export Enhancement Program, which provides a bonus to private exporters who are forced to sell U.S. agricultural products at lower rates overseas to be competitive.

Since the program's inception in 1985, 10 foreign-owned firms have collected about $1.57 billion in subsidies, according to USDA documents obtained by The Associated Press under the Freedom of Information Act. Other foreign-owned companies have received smaller amounts.

The top six U.S. recipients of subsidies under the EEP program have received nearly $2 billion.

These 16 companies each received in excess of $50 million under the program. Both U.S. and foreign-owned companies are eligible for the subsidies.

All told, the Agriculture Department has provided cash and commodities worth more than $4.26 billion to 93 grain traders since the program began in 1985 through mid-January, according to the USDA documents. The subsidies helped move nearly $14 billion in U.S. commodities.

Among the many foreign grain traders in the program, some are U.S. subsidiaries of European or Japanese conglomerates with substantial investment in the United States; others are foreign companies with U.S. offices.

The biggest subsidies were awarded to two U.S. grain traders, Minneapolis-based Cargill Inc., with $800 million, and New York City-based Continental Grain Co., with $702 million.

Next in line is the Paris-based Louis Dreyfus Corp. with nearly $591 million, followed by Ferruzzi Trading U.S.A. Inc., a subsidiary of Italy's Ferruzzi Finanziaria SPA, with nearly $181 million.

A division of Ferruzzi U.S.A. Inc., Arkady Farm Management Inc., collected another $140.7 million.

Counties eligible for disaster loans

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Department of Agriculture has released emergency loan funds for 17 Idaho counties hit by drought or record cold, the agency announced recently.

Seven counties were designated as primary counties.

Farmers in Canyon, Gem and Payette counties can apply for loans for losses to fruit due to freezing between Dec. 16, 1990, and Jan. 6, 1991.

Also, ranchers and producers in Camas, Lincoln and Washington counties are may be eligible for help for damage to crops due to drought between Jan. 1 and Sept. 30 of last year.

Producers in another 10 counties can apply for crop disaster loans as well.

They are Ada, Blaine, Boise, Elmore, Gooding, Idaho, Jerome, Minidoka, Owyhee and Valley counties.

Protection sought for springs

By Mark Kind
Ag Weekly editor

TWIN FALLS — Springs that feed American Falls Reservoir are producing less water than they once did and that is not good news to irrigators served by Twin Falls Canal Co. and North Side Canal Co.

"Those springs account for a large amount of the water used by Twin Falls and North Side canal companies," said University of Idaho hydrologist Charles Brockway.

Norm Young, administrator with the Idaho Department of Water Resources in Boise, said Tuesday that declines in those springs are prompting protests of new wells into the aquifer that supplies the springs.

"I know that's what's prompting the canal companies to say, 'Enough,'" Young said. "They want to protect that water."

Water lawyer John Rosholt, attorney for both irrigation companies, said this week that they may seek tighter state management of the water in the springs, although he declined to be more specific until the companies have decided which of three options they will pursue.

"We are presently filing objections on all new permits, he said. "We have some concerns that all the water is totally appropriated."

Young said the companies have three options:

"They could seek to have the aquifer feeding the springs designated a "critical groundwater area." That would effectively prevent new well development.

They could seek to have the aquifer designated a "groundwater management area." That would tighten state control over the aquifer.

They could seek a new law from the Legislature that would bring the aquifer under tighter management by the Department of Water Resources.

"We're looking at a couple of options," Rosholt said.

Brockway blamed aquifer declines primarily on drought. He said conversions to sprinklers are also to blame, however. Farmers seeking to use less water often install sprinklers, leaving in the Snake River excess water that once seeped into the aquifer from ditch irrigation, Brockway said.

Historically, irrigation seepage has provided 50 percent of the water in the Snake River aquifer, he said.

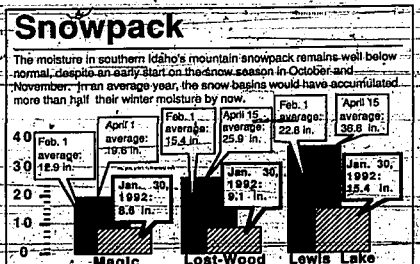

A third factor is new well development, Brockway said, including wells drilled by farmers with sprinkler systems who just don't like the hassles of ditch irrigation.

Wells provide clean, weed seed-free water, he said.

Rosholt said he expected the two companies to decide soon on a course of action.

Snowpack

The moisture in southern Idaho's mountain snowpack remains well below normal, despite an early start on the snow season in October and November. In an average year, the snow basins would have accumulated more than half their winter moisture by now.

Co-op plans no changes for Rangen outlets

By Clark Miller
Ag Weekly writer

BUHL — Farmers will see little change in services at the five Rangen Inc. fertilizer operations purchased by Intermountain Farmers Association, according to IFA Vice-President Fred Brunner.

The Salt Lake City-based cooperative bought Rangen's fertilizer division Jan. 15, assuming ownership of facilities in Heyburn, Kimberly, Curry, Peavey and Idaho Falls. IFA already operates a fertilizer facility in Paul.

"It will be kept pretty much the same as now," Brunner said in a telephone interview from Salt Lake City.

The future of 40 Rangen employees at the five facilities isn't as certain, although most are expected to be retained, said Phil Jones, Rangen vice president.

IFA has been interviewing employees, but has not decided how many will be kept on with the change in ownership, Brunner said.

Jones said Rangen asked IFA to keep a high percentage of employees during negotiations of the sale.

"I don't think there will be very many people who will be displaced because of the sale," he said.

IFA is a regional farm cooperative with retail stores and fertilizer supply facilities in Utah, Idaho, Oregon, Colorado, Nevada and New Mexico. Most of the company's holdings are in Utah, but Brunner said IFA is interested in expanding its Idaho operations.

Rangen, which has been in the fertilizer business for about 50 years, will keep the rest of its business interests, Jones said.

"A small company can only do so many things," he said. "Our opportunities in other areas are much greater than they were in the fertilizer division."

Rangen will retain its commodities, general feeds, aquaculture feeds, aquaculture research and transportation businesses.

Construction of a Rangen fish feed mill in Angleton, Texas, will begin about Feb. 10, Jones said, and the company is remodeling its fish feed mill in Buhl. The Rangen aquaculture research lab in Hagerman is also being remodeled.

"The mill in Texas will produce fish food for customers in the southern U.S. and for export to the Caribbean and Central America, he said.

Irrigators should know soil types and holding capacity, officials say

By H.R. Weixel
Ag Weekly correspondent

JEROME — Knowing the type of soil each crop is growing in and the water holding capacity of that soil is a critical factor for irrigators.

That was the message heard at irrigation seminars across the Magic Valley this week by state agencies, the University of Idaho and Idaho Power Co.

Irrigators must water in the root zones of their plants, for greater efficiency, said William F. Hazen, Lincoln County extension agent as he spoke to almost 50 people in attendance at the Jerome edition of the class.

Seminars were also held in Malta, Burley and Buhl.

The effective root zone of alfalfa in deep soil is from five to six feet, but 47 percent of the alfalfa roots are in the first foot of soil and plants require 47 percent of water at that depth.

Dry beans use 85 percent of moisture from a soil depth of about 18 inches.

Watering deeper than the root system is a waste of water, he said.

> "Available water this year doesn't look good, so we have to utilize the best practices we can in water usage to get maximum profits from crops."
> — William F. Hazen, Lincoln County extension agent

And waste won't be popular this year.

"Available water this year doesn't look good, so we have to utilize the best practices we can in water usage to get maximum profits from crops," Hazen said.

But irrigators have more to worry about besides efficiency.

Hitting bean flowers with water causes the blossoms to fall off and the second bloom will not be as productive. Bean growers should watch the last watering.

"The bean plant can be green, but be physically dead," Hazen said.

Warren Weihing, chemigation specialist from the Idaho Department of Agriculture spoke on rules and regulations governing application of agricultural chemicals through sprinkling systems. This was a required lecture for certification and licensing prior to applying chemicals through sprinklers.

Other presentations included:

- A lecture by Blane Christopherson, civil engineer from the Soil Conservation Service, on what soil is and what it does for plants as a result of correct watering practices.
- Successful irrigation management through irrigation scheduling was presented by Dorrell Larsen, an irrigation consultant from Boise.
- Allen Powers of Bureau of Reclamation led a discussion on Agrimet, an automated weather station network that provides daily crop water use data for irrigation scheduling.

Lawsuits bring farm safety

POCATELLO (AP) — Fear of lawsuits and a growing awareness of agricultural accidents are prompting farmers to protect themselves and their employees with safety gear.

As a result, chemical suits face masks, respirators, hard hats, goggles and earplugs were on display alongside farm machinery and harvesting equipment at the 24th annual Idaho Potato School and Ag Expo this year.

The three-day event was conducted last week at Idaho State University. It drew about 1,000 potato growers, field men and industry representatives.

"Agriculture has the highest mortality and injury rate of any industry in the country," said Chuck Hayden, branch manager of SafetyMaster in Pocatello. "There is no agency that regulates safety on the farm so we are looking at ways we can bring safety awareness to the farmer and the agricultural industry."

Cyanamid, Deere share safety breakthrough

WAYNE, N.J. – Two of the nation's leading agricultural companies, American Cyanamid Company and Deere & Company, announced recently that they will share a unique and important technological advance with four other planter manufacturers.

The innovation, known as the Lock 'n Load closed handling system, is a completely enclosed chemical transfer method that protects farmers from unnecessary exposure to Counter and Thimet insecticides. Counter and Thimet are both organophosphate insecticides used to control a variety of soil insect pests in a number of crops.

"We worked with John Deere to share this technology with other key planter companies because farm worker safety is such an important issue," said William F. R. Griffith III, vice president of Cyanamid agricultural division and general manager of its crop protection chemicals department.

Previously, the Lock 'n Load system was available only on John Deere planters. This new agreement covers equipment manufactured by Case IH, Gandy Company, Kinze, and White-New Idea Farm Equipment. Together with Deere, these manufacturers represent over 90 percent of row crop planter industry.

"We would like to see the Lock 'n Load system become the standard for insecticide handling throughout the agrichemical and farm equipment industries," Griffith added.

Union Pacific will drop freight rate for potatoes this month

BOISE (AP) — Union Pacific Railroad has agreed to cut the rate it charges for shipping Idaho potatoes by $200 per rail car during February, which is National Potato Lovers Month.

"This temporary price rollback comes at a great time for retailers because of the enormous movement of Idaho potatoes this season," Mel Anderson, executive director of the Idaho Potato Commission, said in the commission's newsletter "The IPC Marketing Edge."

Union Pacific also rolled back freight rates on potatoes last August.

The company traditionally has shipped well over half of Idaho's fresh-pack potatoes, but its market share dropped to 43 percent in 1989 and 37 percent in 1990.

But things appear to be turning around. Dave Smith, executive director of the Idaho Grower Shippers Association, said Union Pacific shipped 22 percent more potatoes through the end of December than it had through December 1990. "The railroad marketing people are happy with the return they've seen in their transportation market share this season, and they just want to keep the momentum going," Smith said.

A rail car holds almost 12,000 10-pound bags or 2,400 boxes of potatoes.

Glenn's ag record is a very mixed bag

Certainly Gary Glenn, the former Idaho Cattle Association executive, wants us to believe that he's Idaho agriculture's best friend.

He wants to be a 2nd District congressman, claiming that he can take up the ideological mantle dropped last summer by the retiring Sen. Steve Symms.

But if farmers and ranchers look closely at Glenn's record on agriculture, we think they'll wonder if Glenn hasn't caused the state's biggest industry as much harm as good.

He's a job hopper who in late 1990 escaped from the Idaho Cattle Association just as two years of self-indulgent political grandstanding were catching up with him.

Sure, cattle association membership grew under Glenn's leadership, and he gave ranchers a higher profile in the news media.

But during Glenn's final months as chief spokesman for the Idaho cattle industry, Eastern newspapers and magazines were full of stories portraying local cattle ranchers as wealthy barons despoiling the public's wilderness lands.

Glenn, as the cattle association head, did nothing to blunt that perception. Indeed, he played into it with extreme remarks of his own.

Here at home, the cattle association under Glenn became ineffective in dealing with Gov. Cecil Andrus, who understood quickly that Glenn's political maneuvers were designed mainly to promote Glenn's own interests. Andrus got to a point where he wouldn't allow Glenn in his office.

By late 1990, ranchers found themselves struggling to regain their good reputations and many said privately that Glenn needed to find other pastures.

Glenn got the message. He is now a county commissioner for the state's most urban county, Ada, and still may have trouble telling a polled Hereford from a Holstein. (Hey, they're both cows, right?)

Glenn never did strike us as knowing much about agricultural issues. We can't recall him ever producing a single analysis of farm subjects that demonstrated an understanding of anything other than media deadlines.

Farmers and ranchers should ask themselves whether Glenn is a grandstanding right winger or whether he has what it takes to coolly and calmly negotiate for Idaho agriculture's best interests in Congress.

Is Gary Glenn agriculture's friend, or just his own friend? Idaho ranchers and farmers should ask that question.

Early Andrus move in session would hurt agriculture, Idaho

Mike Tracy

The first month of the 1992 Idaho Legislature is just about wrapped up.

In spite of what appears to be a lack of progress, there is work going on in several committees that will have a profound effect on Idaho agriculture.

Tracy

The Joint Finance and Appropriations Committee (JFAC) has been hearing budget proposals from various agencies and the universities over the last week or two. University of Idaho College of Agriculture Dean Larry Branen presented his budget for research and extension.

According to the Legislative Budget Office, the Idaho State Board of Education approved important research projects that are designed to improve agricultural production techniques. These new technologies are key to Idaho farmers improving their management of the soil, water and use of agricultural chemicals on their crops.

Unfortunately, the governor's office cut the entire increase and it appears that funding may have actually been reduced by as much as $500,000 for research and extension.

Agriculture is one of the engines that make the Idaho economy run. Part of the reason tax receipts have fallen off some this year is because agricultural prices fell in Idaho during 1991.

Now is not the time to start cutting programs that add to the economic prosperity of the state. As much as some people would like to differ, the natural resource-based industries like agriculture still make up the lion's share of the gross state product.

Now it's up to JFAC to decide what pieces of that ag budget they will pick up off the governor's chopping block and what programs they will leave on the committee floor.

Whitefly left big crop, low prices

Candy Sagon

So, did you have to take out a home-equity loan to buy broccoli this winter?

Did you pawn a few of those family antiques to pay for a head of iceberg lettuce?

No? To hear the produce industry moaning last November, consumers were facing a couple of months of spiraling costs and declining supplies of such crops as broccoli, cauliflower and iceberg lettuce, because of damage by swarms of whiteflies in one of California's prime growing areas.

State authorities were predicting up to $200 million in lost crops unless cooler weather could slow the fly's rampage.

Prices would "at least double," said Washington-area chain Giant's director of produce.

In reality, what happened was that none of the shortages ever materialized – even though consumers were hit with prices as high as $3 a head for cauliflower at one point – and produce supplies now are ample with some of the lowest wholesale prices in years.

So why the high prices back in November?

The reason, say most produce industry observers, was panic buying by retailers, who heard the gloomy forecasts by farmers and scrambled to increase supplies of undamaged produce for the holiday season.

"The high prices lasted only two weeks," says Jerry Purdy, Giant's director of produce, "and then the crops from Arizona, Mexico and Florida came in" and prices normalized.

Growers anticipated problems from the whitefly, so they planted more crops than normal. At the same time, consumers cut back on their buying because of the high prices. The result: "We now have a large supply and low (retail) prices," says Connie Cronkleton with the USDA's Agriculture Marketing Service.

And what about the whitefly threat? How did it get swatted down so fast?

Actually, the insidious insect still will be a danger to California's crops when the weather warms up next spring. What stopped the bug cold was Mother Nature, who brought cooler winter temperatures and more rainfall than California has had in five years. The result was less crop damage than expected.

The Far Side

"All right! All right! I confess! I did it! Yes! That's right! The cow! Ha ha ha! And boy! great!"

Pseudorabies testing tops pork producers' agenda Feb. 13-15

TWIN FALLS – The Idaho Pork Producers Association will meet Feb. 13-15 in Twin Falls to consider how to fund a continuing testing program for pseudorabies.

The disease – which can kill piglets and cause stillbirths and abortions – has not yet been documented in an Idaho herd.

"We don't have it now, nor do we want it," said Richard Garrard, University of Idaho Extension agent in Cassia County, who will moderate the discussion.

Dr. Bob Hillman, administrator of the Idaho Department of Agriculture's Division of Animal Industries, said the virus is generally fatal to dogs and cats and can also kill cattle.

Last year, the Idaho Legislature allocated $15,000 in general funds for a pilot testing program of slaughter sows and boars that has not detected a single case in an Idaho herd – although one animal from an eastern Washington herd did test positive at a northern Idaho slaughterhouse.

The pork producers must now find another way to raise $15,000 to $18,000 annually to fund the program – possibly by establishing a commission that would administer a 20-cent-per head checkoff.

Rick Wahley, executive secretary of the Idaho Pork Producers Association, said because this "a difficult time to propose additional money out of their check. It's not the timing we would want."

But he said if Idaho does not keep up with a nationwide drive to eliminate pseudorabies in the U.S. by the year 2000, "we'll have difficulty moving swine out of the state."

While no treatments are available for pseudorabies, a number of vaccines are, Hillman said.

Also on the agenda are the state sales tax, the 1 percent property tax issue, fat in the American diet, and consumer trends for pork.

The meeting will be at the Canyon Springs Inn.

Rain ... please come someday

Suzanne Hurzhold
Clover Creek

I woke up this morning to the sound of rain outside my bedroom window. Rain!

I did a little dance on the top of my bed in my night-gown and threw my wedding ring and my first-born out onto the lawn as an offering to the goddess of rain. Then I stood at the window and watched the first moisture in months fall softly onto my cold, dry valley.

Thirty seconds later, it stopped. Damn fickle country, this one. I don't know how much more of this heartbreak I can stand.

It's true that it doesn't rain much in California, not lately anyway, but like the song says, when it rains, man, it pours. Really rains for hours, sometimes days—if a front has moved in off the ocean. The streets flood and your septic tank overflows and everyone gets in a temper as foul as the weather and it's lovely.

But here the rain is just a temptress. She moves the clouds slowly overhead, tantalizing you with their gray promise. Then she spits at you a little, just enough to draw you outside in anticipation. The sweet scent of it fills your nose, and the pores of your skin and the cracks in the ground ready themselves to drink it in.

And just when you think it's time to let the dogs in, or set the plants out, or roll up the windows in the pickup, she cuts you off cold, cruelly heading off to south Texas to become a nightmare.

Five years of dry, chintzy promises. Like a groom eternally left at the altar, we wait, hoping she'll change her mind and come back. But she doesn't, or hasn't so far, and the old people who tell us she always comes back eventually, to fill the reservoirs and swell the streams, are no comfort to us.

It's our own fault that we feel so betrayed. We rushed into our relationship with this land and the rain that keeps it alive. It was a short romance followed by a long-distance engagement, filled with memories and dreams and not much reality.

The first time we saw this place was in June of 1986. The winter had been long and wet; there was still snow on Davis Mountain, and Clover Creek was running just under the bridge. The rimrock hills that surround the ranch were Irish green, and we picked handfuls of lupine and yellowbells to decorate the dinner table.

My stepdad took us over the gulch one day and dropped us into the fairyland of Camas Prairie just as the lilies were in fullest bloom. The prairie looked like it was under purple-blue water, and we lunched on watercress out of a cold stream that has since dried to powder.

We were duped, fooled. We thought it would be like this forever. Plenty of sweet rain to smooth out the wrinkles of a new life in the semi-wilderness. How could we be so stupid?

I guess we didn't see the miles of sagebrush. Sagebrush is a desert plant. Not much sagebrush in Hawaii, for instance. I guess we didn't see the lines in the skin of the old women, lines that have since appeared on my own face, testimony to arid years. I guess we didn't see how unnaturally happy everyone was that summer.

We rushed into it, anxious to marry ourselves to the ranch and the rain. Now we repent in leisure. Not repent exactly, because we love our life here. But we have hay and children to raise, and we can't wait forever for capricious paramours to visit us in the night. We need a wife, dependable and sturdy, who will drop rain on us at reasonably reliable intervals, and wash our valley like a pair of dirty socks.

If she will, we'll give her wedding rings and first-born children and anything else she wants.

Try German cake recipe

GERMAN CHOCOLATE DE LIGHT

Prepare 1 package German chocolate cake mix as directed.

Pour one-half the batter into a greased and lightly floured 13" x 9" cake pan and bake 15 minutes at 350 degrees.

Let cool.

When cool, layer on top of cake:

One 12 oz. package chocolate chips

One 12 oz. jar carmel topping

One cup chopped nuts

Top with remaining batter.

Bake 15 to 20 minutes at 350 degrees.

Serve with a whipped topping.

Jody and Kevin Draper are the parents of Craig, 8, and Katelyn, 4. They have managed the Jerome bird farm for four years. Kevin Draper is a meat cutter at his father's deli in Jerome.

Cramer joins group

BUHL – Ruby Cramer is a new member of the American Angus Association, reports Dick Spader, executive vice president of the national organization with headquarters in St. Joseph, Missouri.

The American Angus Association, with over 24,000 active adult and junior members, is the largest beef cattle registry association in the world.

Its computerized records include detailed information on nearly 11 million registered Angus.

Blackfoot vet takes over

By Michael Hofferber
Ag Weekly correspondent

SUN VALLEY – A veterinarian specializing in large-animal care at the Blackfoot Animal Clinic has been appointed president of the Idaho Veterinary Medical Association.

Dr. Brian Risa became president of the 300-member IVMA at the organization's winter meeting at the Elkhorn Resort in Sun Valley last weekend.

"This has been a very emotional meeting," Risa said of the session, held Jan. 23-26.

Jim LaGrone of Castleford, executive director of the IVMA for the past 10 years, died suddenly three months ago and the membership is still coming to terms with the loss, Risa said.

A veterinary scholarship program in LaGrone's memory, sponsored by the Idaho Veterinary Medical Foundation, was announced during the meeting.

Succeeding LaGrone as executive director is Paul Bosarge, formerly an employee of the Appaloosa Horse Club in Moscow. His IVMA office will be based in Boise.

Risa, who was raised on a cattle ranch in eastern Montana, has been practicing veterinary medicine in Blackfoot for seven years.

As president of the IVMA for 1992, he succeeds Dr. Darwin Yoder of Wendell.

Dr. Magretta Kethler, IVMA's president in 1990, was named Veterinarian of the Year by the organization, recognizing her 16 years of service on state regional and national boards of veterinary medicine.

Draft horses are big, lovable and fun

By Terrell Williams
Ag Weekly correspondent

JEROME – Heavy horses were strutting their stuff last Saturday.

At their first "play day" of the year in the Aslett arena southeast of Jerome, drivers weaved their stout teams through a course of orange pylons, trying for the fastest time.

The teams dug in and proved their strength by dragging 16-foot long logs.

In a contest of precision, drivers steered their wagons as close as possible to a pylon without hitting it. They also backed wagons to a loading dock, then "fanned" their horses, making the teams swing around from one side to the other without moving the wagon forward.

"Their eyes magnify you about five times, so they think you are big," Joyce Edwards said as she scratched the neck of one of her Belgians.

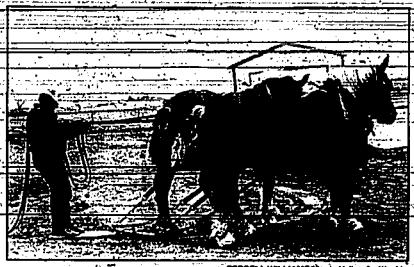

"They don't know the power they have."

Edwards, who lives on a ranch in Jerome, said the Southern Idaho Draft Horse and Mule Association was formed last year in March. This family organization now has 42 members who meet once a month for playdays and potluck dinners at different locations around the Magic Valley.

Some of the members drive light horses, Edwards said, and the club's purpose is to promote fellowship of people who enjoy driving teams.

Young drivers get sage advice from the experienced drivers, she said, and the history of driving horses is being preserved.

Draft horses originally were bred in medieval times for knights to ride in armies, Edwards said. The armor alone, on a knight, weighed 400 or 500 pounds or more," she said.

TERRELL WILLIAMS/Magic Valley Ag Weekly

Lawrence Edwards, president of the Southern Idaho Draft Horse and Mule Association, keeps his team of sorrel Belgians in control at a recent playday in Jerome.

The heavy horses were not brought to the United States in significant numbers until the 1920s, just about the time that tractors hit the market, Edwards said.

After a decline for many years, the heavy breeds now are in revival, she explained. Interest in them is growing as more people own them for pleasure and more classes for them are offered at fairs.

In the United States, there are five registered breeds of draft – or, more properly, "draught" – horses.

They are the Clydesdale, with long white hair on powerful legs, the tall and showy Shire, the shorter Suffolk, the gray or black Percheron, and the gentle Belgian.

Edwards said her husband, Lawrence, will use his Belgian team this summer to farm 10 acres in Jerome.

In June, the draft horses will march in Shoshone for that city's 150th anniversary celebration of the railroad.

"We're hoping to have a good, all-horse parade," Edwards said.

The association also works with handicapped children, taking them for wagon rides in the mountains.

"You don't want to ride a draft horse," Edwards noted. "You'd have your legs sticking clear out to the side."

When they are only yearlings, the heavy horses can be trained and hitched to pull light loads, she said. Show harnesses studded with silver or bronze can cost $3,000 a set. Plain work harnesses are built twice as heavy to stand the stress of mighty pulling contests.

Edwards said a horse is considered a draft animal at 1,200 pounds and up.

She recalled a big Canadian team visiting Idaho last year, and each of the two horses weighed 2,600 pounds.

"They were beautiful Belgians," Edwards said.

The draft horse and mule association welcomes new members and spectators.

Edwards said those who want more information can call her at 324-1178.

"I guess you know by now, I love these big horses," she said. "They're gentle giants. They're sweet. I love my riding horses, too, but these are different. They're just awesome."

U.S. tries birth control on wild horse herds

CARSON CITY, Nev. (AP) — Unable to stop the growth of the West's wild horse herds with roundups and an adopt-a-horse program, the government will try birth control on the mustangs.

The Bureau of Land Management project will be limited to Nevada, which has 70 percent of the nation's wild horse herds.

About 50,000 wild mustangs roam public lands in several Western states.

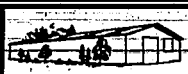

Under the $400,000 project, horses will be rounded up and given long-lasting birth control shots or implants. Others could be injected with dart guns while on the open range.

The goal is not to stop the horses from reproducing but to cut the herds' annual growth rate from about 14 percent down to about 6 percent.

If the project works here, it could spread to the other states, said BLM spokeswoman Maxine Shane.

The project follows a 1990 congressional study that found the horse adoption program had become increasingly costly and that there was no evidence that land that was being overgrazed by the animals had benefited.

Jerome kids aim at grain

By H.R. Weixel
Ag Weekly correspondent

JEROME – Raising hybrid barley, using genetics to change types of crops, and developing drought-resistant grains are some of the projects being conducted by Jerome High School agriculture science and technology students.

"Kids are tired of the traditional cows, plows and sows curriculum in ag classes," said Thomas Clifton, instructor, as he reviewed bio-technology and hydroponics textbooks being used by his students.

Using three varieties obtained from the experiment station at the Montana State University, Carter and Shawcroft will cross-breed the barley in search of a more drought-resistant grain.

The original seeds had been crossed about 12 times prior to being used in Jerome. "We will try to get the three types of barley back to the original plant as part of our experiment," Clifton said.

4-H pair will learn about government

TWIN FALLS – Kristi Dennis of the West End Wonders 4-H club and Sarah Zoch of the Just-Hoof'N' It 4-H club, have been chosen to take part in the 1992 4-H Know Your Government Conference Feb. 15-17 in Boise.

Ann Dennis of the West End Wonders 4-H club will also be attending as an adult advisor.

The teens are among 150 eighth- and ninth-grade 4-H'ers who will participate in workshops, tours and discussions to learn about Idaho's state government decision-making process and judicial system, according to Mary Jean Craig of the Idaho State 4-H Office.

Delegates will have breakfast with legislators from their districts, tour the Capitol and Supreme Court building, observe a session of the Idaho Legislature and take part in mock legislative sessions and committee meetings and mock court trials.

Idaho Attorney General Larry Echohawk, Idaho Supreme Court Justice Charles McDevitt, House Speaker Tom Boyd, Idaho State University political science professor David Adler and other Idaho legislative and judicial members will address delegates on various aspects of politics and law. Delegates also will learn how teenagers can help influence state government policy design.

Tiny horses have 'mini-whinny'

POMEROY, Wash. (AP) – They race around the corral as if they're thoroughbreds pounding the turf at Santa Anita race track with the crowds cheering and waving. They prance proudly, heads up, tails swishing.

But they're miniature colts – a black stud, Thunder, and a dapple-gray filly, Blue Bonnet, with a long fawn-colored mane and tail. They stand about 29 inches high and each weighs 100 to 125 pounds.

They are furry, cuddly, playful creatures.

The prancing pair are two of a startup herd of miniature horses at the stables of Annette and Kurt "Butch" Low, who live south of Pomeroy. They have eight of the diminutive creatures so far, the colts, five mares and an adult stud.

Low said he'd like to build his herd to about 15 mares. Already the mares are expected to foal in the spring. Miniatures have an 11-month gestation period, just like their larger peers.

He said his family "caught the miniature bug" in June after he read a newspaper advertisement about them being offered for sale in northern Idaho.

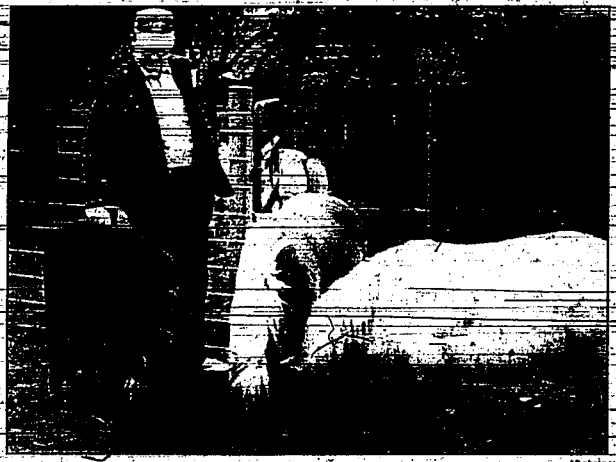

"We decided to drive up and look at these little things," he said. "That's where we got the bug. Our 6-year-old son, Heath, had a ball."

They bought the colts in Sandpoint, Idaho, acquired a mare in Palouse and a stud and additional mares from Round Lake, Ill.

The animals range in color from sorrel to white to dapple gray and liver chestnut. One with pinto genes has one spot.

The two colts drink from a five-gallon bucket and munch hay from a rubber tire. They nicker, and as Low says, they have a "mini-whinny."

AP photo

Other news

One of the first breeders of miniature in the United States was Norman Fields of Bedford, Va., who raised them for work in the Virginia coal mines. When miners needed a 30-inch horse, Fields had them.

Another pioneer in the arena, was Smith McCoy of Rodderfield, W.Va., who bought and sold the small horses as a hobby. But when he discovered the smaller the steed, the bigger the price, he began buying horses that were under 32 inches tall. After rounding up a dozen that size, he bred them.

When he sold his miniatures in 1967, he had the largest herd of little horses in the country – none over 32 inches high.

Today's miniatures come in two groups: the stocky draft horse and the finer-boned thoroughbred. Those classified under Division A stand from 26 to 34 inches tall. Division B miniatures range from 34 to 38 inches tall.

The Lows' grown stud, the liver chestnut, fits the shorter height requirement. The adult mares fall within the taller class. Low said he hopes to breed smaller foals.

He said miniatures are a "big item" in Japan because they don't take up much space. Cost of a miniature in this country ranges from $500 to $25,000. In Japan, they sell for even more.

Low plans to show his collection of miniatures at community fairs and festivals. Despite their size, the little horses can pull small, two-wheel carts with adults at the reins.

MOSCOW (AP) – After Kevin Haley stumbled across a blacksmith's shop during a school field trip to Williamsburg, Va., he became separated from the rest of the class.

"It was the first time I'd ever seen a real, working blacksmith shop," he said. "I was just amazed." More than 25 years later, the Palouse region's only full-time hot-shoe farrier is still separated from most in his class.

In a profession that's not regulated, where certification is voluntary and qualification ranges from zero to expert, Haley is driven to be the best.

"I want to get to the point where I can make any shoe just like walking," he said. "I don't even have to think about it. Like throwing a ball. To do that I have to work the forge constantly," said Haley, 34.

Only about 10 percent of all farriers certified with the American Farrier's Association work full-time hot shoeing.

"He's the most competent farrier I've dealt with in the area. He's not just a farrier for the job. It's his life," said Washington State University veterinarian Jeremy Naylor, who specializes in equine studies for WSU's veterinary hospital in Pullman.

Naylor said Haley's clients drive from as far as Spokane to have their horses shod.

On a cold day last week, Haley worked on his wife's chestnut appaloosa, Lucky. The smell of burnt hoof steamed through the shop as he fitted the shoe to Lucky's right front foot. The horse, tethered on a floor mat, waited patiently.
